JEP MOORE'S COURTSHIP

By W. J. Long

Jep Moore was in love with the daughter of a farmer who lived at the edge of town. He had admired her from afar for two years and had admired nothing in all the world as much as he admired her. She didn't know it, but Jep had been in love with her for two years.

She was the reason he had been writing letters to her every week for two years. He had written her love letters, and he had written her stories, and he had written her poems. He had written her everything he could think of to say to her.

He said that he loved her, and he said that he would marry her, and he said that he would love her forever. He said that he would do anything she wanted him to do, and he said that he would love her for the rest of his life.

She was the reason he had been writing letters to her every week for two years. He had written her love letters, and he had written her stories, and he had written her poems. He had written her everything he could think of to say to her.
