When men and women of the Fulton County News went out to cover the news in their communities, they not only reported on the local events, but also provided information on the latest news from around the world. The news articles in this page range from local happenings to national events, providing a comprehensive view of the 1918 news cycle. The advertisements at the bottom of the page serve as a reminder of the time when newspapers were a primary source of information. The advertisements for Dr. Miles Anti-Pain Pills and the Fulton County News call attention to the importance of pain relief during the flu pandemic of 1918. TheSilver State News page provides details on the latest news from the state, while the Stockdale Cafe and Osteopath advertisements offer a glimpse into the local businesses and medical practices of the time. The Ladies Missionary Society's schedule and the list of people visiting other homes highlight the social and community aspects of the era. The "Silence May Be Golden" advertisement serves as a reminder of the importance of communication in times of crisis. The "The Question" section poses a question to the reader, urging them to consider the possibilities of navigating through the challenges of the pandemic. The "We'll Help You Prepare Your Ads. Cuts and Copy Ready" advertisement offers a service to help businesses connect with their audience in the midst of the pandemic. The "Fulton County News" page serves as a testament to the dedication of the news media in providing timely and accurate information to their readers.
