A L'ABANDON.

Long ago, in England, the "90's" were characteristic. The great iron works of the country were then entirely under the control of a few great capitalists, who were able to dictate prices and terms of sale to their employers. To-day, in the United Kingdom, the situation is quite different. Electric light and power have greatly increased the efficiency of iron works, and the competition of foreign producers has reduced the price of steel to a very low figure. The result is that the great iron works of England are now owned and operated by a number of independent manufacturers, who are able to compete with one another in the market for steel.

One of the most interesting points in this transition is the change in the mode of production. In the past, steel was produced by the open hearth process, which involved the use of large amounts of coal and coke. Today, however, steel is produced by the Bessemer process, which is much more efficient and economical. This change has had a profound effect on the industry, and has led to a great increase in the output of steel.

Another important change has been the introduction of modern management techniques. In the past, steel production was largely controlled by large, powerful companies, which were able to maintain their control through the use of political influence and other means. Today, however, the industry is characterized by a great deal of competition, and the most efficient companies are able to gain a significant advantage over their rivals.

In summary, the iron and steel industry of England has undergone a great transformation in recent years. The transition from the open hearth process to the Bessemer process, coupled with the introduction of modern management techniques, has led to a significant increase in the efficiency and output of the industry.

The London polytechnic institute reports that its plan of bringing together artists and others interested in the fine arts is resulting in enabling 2,000 of its members to attend a total expense of something like 10,000 dollars.

The London polytechnic institute has some of the best art exhibits in the world and the people are all for them. The institute is a great success, it is the second best place in the world for people to see and the finest of the best.

The institute is a great institution which will stand on a permanent basis as one of the greatest and most valuable institutions in the world. The institute is a great success and the people are all for them. The institute is a great success and the people are all for them. The institute is a great success and the people are all for them.
