Some Good Advice

For the Towns of Our Country, By Mr. Wright

How Rests in Heaven.

I wish to say a few words to the parents of our youth, who are the real masters, by the title of guardianship, of the moral and intellectual destinies of the young of the future. It is not to be supposed that I shall charge you with neglecting the instruction or religious duties of your children. By no means. I am sure you are all disposed to teach them what is good and true; but I do not mean those intellectual duties, but I mean the duties of kindness, of confidence, of affection, of love. And this is what I wish to say. You know that you are the real masters of your children. You are their true guardians. You are their true monitors. You are their true teachers. You are their true friends. You are their true benefactors. You are their true protectors. You are their true benefactors.
