EDITORIAL COLUMN

The pages of this magazine have been filled with poetry, prose, and stories that have captivated our readers. Today, we bring you a column that delves into the world of little men and little women, exploring their untold stories from days of yesteryear. These narratives are not to be forgotten, for they reveal the true nature of life and its complexities. Within your own being, prove that you are either true or untrue, good or evil. In proving yourself, you contribute to the tapestry of human experience, which is woven from the threads of our shared history.

We are fortunate to have a teacher who was always glad to help her students. A teacher who not only taught but also loved her pupils. She knew that they knew more than they thought they knew, and they loved having her as a teacher. She believed that we, like the proverbial blind men and the elephant, learn from each other's experiences and that the only one who can truly know the truth is the one who lives it. But we cannot go back. Being historical, we cannot change the past. Rather, we must learn from it to shape our future.

A little man and a little woman, they stood together in the face of adversity. They were not afraid to speak their minds, even if it meant causing a stir. They were determined to change the world, one idea at a time. They believed that the one great and true solvent for all the ills of mankind was to be found in the stillness of the human heart, the peaceful sleep of the soul.

There are some who speak, write, or publish anything that they have not proven by the stillness of law. They are not to be trusted. For them, the theory would work for the benefit of all, and they would be the ones to establish it. But we cannot go back. Being experienced, we cannot unlearn what we have learned.

The poor old Eagles must live by their wits. They know that they are not foolish, but they have learned from their experiences. They have seen the light of wisdom in the eyes of others, and they have embraced it. They know that the only way to truly know anything is to prove it. They have learned that the beauty of which was in the power of reason, not in the power of persuasion.

There is no weak link in the chain of humanity. We are all connected, and we must work together to build a better future. Let us learn from the stories of those who came before us, and let us prove that we are great or true, good or evil. In proving ourselves, we contribute to the tapestry of human experience, which is woven from the threads of our shared history.

The Wise Little Shepherd Boy

I don't know whether to begin my story "Once upon a time," or the "long, long ago." It is a panoramic story and has a moral purpose, of which this too, you see, is simplifying the main feature.

So here begins a story of two shepherds. One is a youthful boy mere ten years of age.

As the sun set over the hills, the Little Shepherd Boy said, "Father, let the goats stay up tonight." Father said, "No, I want to tell a story, "Once upon a time," and I will say it to you to-morrow." One of the young goats was a little girl, and Mother was father's sheep in charge of the flock.

The Little Shepherd Boy said, "Father, let the goats stay up tonight." Father said, "No, I want to tell a story, "Once upon a time," and I will say it to you to-morrow."

The Little Shepherd Boy said, "Father, let the goats stay up tonight."

And the conversation ended, as the gathering darkened, as the moon ascended above the mountains, and the Little Shepherd Boy said, "Father, let the goats stay up tonight." The young girl sheep said, "Father, let the goats stay up tonight."
