HOME BEAUTIFICATION

Cities are not judged primarily from the number of industrial institutions by the casual visitor. It is the homes of the individuals living within the city that attracts the eye of the stranger. Usually they are noticed whether they are particularly pretty or not, and the appearance aids the observer to determine for himself. At least he draws his own conclusions as to the general atmospheric conditions.

It would help in the development of any ambitious town if the idea could be disseminated that every home place ought to be beautified by some effort at gardening. We should look at a home without this form of improvement, as too severely plain. It looks like a woman who never attempted to have pretty clothing, but merely wore the most unadorned garments that she could make from the plainest and dullest materials.

Thus the garden or the bed of shrubbery should be regarded not as a kind of superfluity, which is nice to

HOW AND WHEN TO EAT

How we eat has a great bearing upon our health, and every one should learn how and when to eat. By eating, the greater part of our life is sustained, our bodies builded and repaired. The utilization of food by the body in a great measure depends upon when and how we eat. Nearly all forms of life, both vegetable and animal, are used by man as food, and his body is constructed that it utilizes both characters of food to advantage.

The body is endowed with a sense or instinct, the hunger sense, so that when the body needs food the individual will appreciate this sense and feel hungry or desire food. As a rule this hungry sense can be relied upon to guide us when to eat. Eat only when hungry, and when food is relished.

Because in this age of civilization we have three or more meals a day it does not mean that the body needs food that often. On the other hand eating so often and more than the body needs, is the cause of a vast amount of sickness. Eat to maintain the body at its highest development and efficiency, and not to satisfy an abnormal and badly trained appetite.

In eating, most of our food should be thoroughly torn, mashed, pulverized and ground with our teeth, and well mixed with our saliva. This is very important as the food we eat will not be properly digested if not rendered practically in a fluid state and thoroughly mixed with the saliva in the mouth before it is swallowed. A good rule to follow is to chew each mouthful of food until when swallowed it can not be felt in the throat as a mass.

Good teeth are an absolute requisite for good digestion and health. If your teeth are not good have them righted at once and keep them at their best. Also as the state of mind has a great bearing on digestion, we should eat under the most pleasant conditions possible. Throw off your grouch, worries and cares when you go to the table. Banish disputes and wrangles from the family meals. Make your eating time the most pleasant of the day. It will pay you large health dividends.

have, but not necessary, but as an essential element in the completeness of a home. Almost every home place has a little land around it that can be beautified. If that land stands idle and nothing is done with it, it is an element of waste. There is an opportunity to make the home seem attractive and homelike, but that opportunity is not used.

There are some people so beauty loving that their homes blossom wherever they are. If their home merely has the tinnest back yard, they have some flowering plants there. If there is no back or front yard, then they probably have window boxes and pots of plants that create a festive note.

There are some communities where gardening has thus become an almost universal custom, and where people would as soon think of having an undecorated home, as having one with the paint all worn off. Place with that character become noted for long distance, and the people remember them and say they wish they had homes there. The silent influence of fat beauty does more to promote the development, than half a hundred town boosters emphatically shouting all the time, but not turning their hands to do any real work.

TEAM WORK COUNTS

It is an undisputed fact that no one man, no set of men, has or have ever been able to corral the entire sun of human knowledge. This fact is apparent in every line of human efforts and is the result of another fact—man is a mortal of limited capacity to assimilate knowledge.

Possibly if the span of human life was lengthened to the Methuselah record, a greater degree of perfection might be reached.

The world is moved along by team work, that is, it progresses from the lower to the higher standards of development to the aggregate knowledge of the whole people. Huxley, Faraday, Edison—a thousand great minds I might mention, were individualists; that is no one of them knew all about everything. Edison never gave the world the wireless, nor Marconi produce the phonograph. There was but one Washington and one Lincoln. But it has taken the combined knowledge of all the great minds the world has produced to develop our present civilization with all its human advantages and enjoyments.

What I am trying to say is this—that all the grand results achieved have been the result of team work. It is the aggregate sum of human knowledge followed by persistent effort that brings results.
