APPENDICITIS

Appendicitis is now one of the most serious and frequently occurring diseases. In fact, it is the most frequent surgical emergency treated in hospitals today. For any other disease condition, this is as it should be, since it is in these cases where there is an acute attack, and the condition is usually recognized and treated by the proper methods at a much earlier time. For instance, if a patient has appendicitis, he should consult his physician at once, and he should be treated immediately. If the condition is not promptly treated, the patient will suffer greatly, and the disease may become fatal.

The disease is caused by an inflamed appendix, which is the end of the large intestine. The appendix is a small, tubular organ which protrudes from the large intestine. The disease is usually caused by the growth of a single, very small, bacterium, which is called the " appendix bacillus." The disease is usually treated by the administration of a special medicine, called an "antibiotic." The disease is very serious, and it is important that every patient who has this condition be treated immediately. If the condition is not promptly treated, the patient will suffer greatly, and the disease may become fatal.

Hauling Cotton Before the 'Iron Horse'

There is no sentiment involved in saying the early method of hauling cotton before the 'Iron Horse' [Arch, M. Molthaler] was depicted in the excellent illustrative piece above. The work of Andrew Davis, who has been at the bedside of Mrs. C. E. Trigg of Union City, was the favorite theme of Mrs. C. E. Trigg of Union City and her children, who spent the weekend in Paducah, and her husband was one of those who helped lay the first track of the U.S. Army on the Union line.
