Fall Treatment

For Worms Urge

Floodworms, the autumnal pork worms, are in October or November a menace to pigs. The worms, which cause stunted growth and malnutrition, can be controlled by treating with anthelmintics. Anthelmintics work by breaking the life cycle of the parasite, preventing it from reproducing and spreading. They can be administered orally or parenterally, depending on the specific product and the stage of the infection.

Grid Fans Hurt

As Balloons Explode

Balloons, especially those filled with helium, can burst and cause injury or death. Helium balloons can rise to high altitudes and even escape into the stratosphere, where they can be ingested by birds and other wildlife. The U.S. Federal Aviation Administration (FAA) and other organizations recommend that balloons be secured or allowed to fly only if they are designed to return to Earth safely or are not present in the airspace.
