SERIOUS ACCIDENT.

Young Man Seriously Hurt by Being Stepped on By a Train.

Chas. Sills, aged about 18 years, step-son of Wm. Richards, residing in West Mayfield, was seriously wounded at Water Valley last Sunday. It seems that the young man together with a comrade had boarded a freight train and landed in Fulton to take in the sights and was returning home. The train stopped at Water Valley for water and the boys were taking in the town. The train pulled out at a rapid rate and some of the train crew admonished young Sills to not try to board it. Despite the warning, Sills attempted to board the train and was thrown under same. His right leg was terribly lacerated, the flesh being torn from the bone above the knee and he was bruised and crushed about the head and chest. The train crew picked the young man up and upon reaching Wingo wired his friends who met him at the depot at this place. His wounds were dressed by Dr. J. L. Dismukes, Jr., who reports the matter of some seriousness and the leg wound is one to be feared.

There is entirely too much of this train riding in the city confines, as boys running in age from 8 to 20 are constantly catching and riding both freight and passenger trains. The undertaking is hazardous and should be stopped by some one. Parents should see to it that their boys are kept away from the depot.

His condition for a time was quite serious, but after willing hands administered, he rallied and is resting well.

FAMOUS "BELLED BUZZARD"

Its Visits to Missouri, Including the Present One, Have Always Preceded Some Serious Calamity.

The appearance in Missouri of the famous "belled buzzard" after an absence of several years, during which time it was thought the venerable bird had died, gives rise to speculation as to its origin and history.

The "belled buzzard's" fame extends over the whole area of the United States, in nearly every part of which it has been reported to have been seen at some time or other in the last hundred years.

The first authentic record we have of its appearance in this section of the country dates back to the year 1854, when it was seen by hundreds and gained considerable newspaper notoriety. This was just preceding the terrible drought of that year, and it remained during the greater part of the dry weather.

Near the end of the drought it disappeared and was seen no more in this section until 1861, at the breaking out of the war, during which it hovered over the country like some bird of ill omen. Indeed, considered in the light of subsequent events, its appearance at these particular times now seems sinister.

For several years succeeding the Civil War the belled buzzard was a frequent visitor, but gradually the time between its visits lengthened until it would disappear for years at a time.

Mention was made in the newspapers of its appearance in various States, but it always eventually returned to Missouri, for which it seemed to have a fondness. But finally it disappeared for a much longer period than usual, and people had begun to think the old bird dead, when it came into notice again by its reappearance here just before the present drought set in.

Many declared when it first came that its appearance augured no good, and so it proved. There are scores of people throughout this section who look upon the old bird with a degree of superstition.

This will probably be its last visit, for it is growing very old and feeble. Some even say that it has turned gray. Vitality is leaving it; its movements are slow and denote great feebleness, and it is evident that this aged bird, which has doubtless seen the dawn of two centuries, will soon die from sheer old age.

Much speculation is indulged in as to the origin and history of the "belled buzzard," but to little avail. Those who could have thrown light upon its history have doubtless long since died. No one seems disposed to shoot it for it has come to be looked upon with awe.—St. Louis Republic.

This same buzzard has been seen two or three times in Marshall and Graves county in the last forty years.

Arm Broken.

Vivian, the little daughter of Mr. and Mrs. H. C. Canaday, while playing on the door step Sunday evening, had the misfortune to fall and break her arm.

The little one suffered considerably until Dr. E. A. Stephens arrived and set and dressed the wounded member, and at last account she was resting easy.

MASTER OF HIS CRAFT.

Immigrant Station Furnishes Practical Sermon on the Subject of Competence.

Among the immigrants awaiting examination at Ellis Island recently was a tall young fellow with a little black bag under his arm.

When the young man's turn came to answer the inevitable question: "How much money have you?" he smiled and answered frankly: "None."

"But don't you know you can't come in here if you have no money and no friend to speak for you?"

"To Fall River, first. I have a friend there. Then I shall see the whole country. I shall make money. You will hear of me."

The inspector proceeded rather sharply: "How will you get to Fall River? Where will you eat and sleep to-night?"

"I shall be all right," replied the young fellow, confidently. "With this"—tapping the black bag—"I can go anywhere."

"What is it?" "The Pole laughed, and, opening the bag, took out a cornet. It was a fine instrument, and gave evidence of loving care.

"Can you play it well?" asked the official, more kindly.

In answer, the young Pole stepped out into the open space and, lifting the horn to his lips, began the beautiful intermezzo from "Cavalleria Rusticana."

"At the first note everyone in the great building stood still and listened. The long lines of immigrants became motionless. The forlorn waltzers in the pit looked up and their faces became tender.

When the music ceased there was a burst of applause. Shouts of "Bravo!" "Good boy!" "Give us some more!" came from every side.

The physicians, who had a few moments before made their hurried and not over gentle examination, joined in the applause.

The officer who had questioned him so sharply slapped him on the back. The commissioner himself had come up from the office at the sound of the horn, and asked for the particulars.

When he heard them he turned to the agent of the Fall River boats and said: "Give this fellow a passage, including meals, and charge it to me."

"I will charge it to myself," said the agent, and he took the young Pole by the arm and led him away.

The incident was a sermon on competence—a lesson on what it means to be a master. The trade may be music or farming or bricklaying—it does not matter.

The man who has conquered it, who knows it, root and branch, can point to it as confidently as the young Pole pointed to his cornet, and say, as he did: "With this I can go anywhere."

DATE PALMS WILL GROW HERE

This Gives Hope of Redeeming the Alkali Lands of the Southwestern States.

The date palm may solve the problem of what to do with the arid and alkali lands of Arizona, California and other western states.

Experiments have been made in the past by the agricultural department and experiment stations, but renewed interest is being taken by the section of plant introduction of the department of agriculture, and Prof. D. G. Fairchild, agricultural explorer for the department, now traveling in Africa, has procured a number of suckers, or offshoots, from the delta of the Nile which he has shipped to the department and which will be distributed in the southwestern part of this country.

In the United States the date is an article of luxury, but in its native country it is a most important food, many regions in Arabia and the Sahara being uninhabitable but for the date palm. The United States annually imports nearly a million dollars' worth of dates, but it is possible, the department believes, to raise all the dates needed in this country.

The date palm, although grown profitably only in arid and semiarid regions, is not in the proper sense of the word a desert plant. It requires a fairly abundant, and, above all, a constant supply of water at the roots, and at the same time it delights in a perfectly dry and very hot climate. The date palm is able to stand much more cold than an orange tree, but not so much as a peach tree.

The industrial and commercial papers of continental Europe are calling attention to the approaching competition of American corn oil. It is stated that this oil is greatly appreciated from an industrial point of view and that its fine golden color and agreeable taste make it a possible rival for older and better-known varieties of table oil.

Well-directed efforts have been made for some time, notably at the Paris exposition, to establish this product in foreign markets, and from present indications it would appear that they have been successful.

The reason some people can load so much is because they do not pay their debts.—Washington (La.) Democrat.

THE AMATEUR REFORMER.

Allows His Indignation to Lead Him into an Exhibition of Temper.

"If you don't mind my mentioning it," mildly suggested the tall passenger sitting opposite, relates the Chicago Tribune, "it is a rather dangerous practice to spit out through the window of a train on an elevated railway."

"I don't see any danger," said the other passenger, a light-complexioned man with a dyed chin beard and a short black pipe.

"No danger to you, perhaps," rejoined the first speaker, "but decidedly dangerous and unpleasant to anybody who might happen to be walking on the sidewalk below."

"That's his lookout, and not mine," "Just so. But, if you had looked out perhaps you wouldn't have done it."

"Maybe I wouldn't and maybe I would." "It's more comforting to believe you wouldn't. I hate to think a man will knowingly and intentionally make a hog, or worse than a hog, of himself, even if he does ride in a smoking car."

"What difference does it make to you? If you don't like it, you know, you don't have to stay here."

"I have to stay here or stand up. The other cars are all full. I don't consider you entitled to any explanation of my being here, but in the interests of historical accuracy I thought I'd tell you."

"That's all right. But you'd better be a bit careful how you call people hogs, just the same."

"It was a thoughtless comparison, I confess. A hog wouldn't do such a thing."

"You seem to be hunting for trouble, old chap, and you're likely to get it in chunks if you don't go slow."

"I should regret that exceedingly. To get into a muss with a man like you would be an experience I would go miles to avoid."

"Then you'd better keep your mouth shut, if you know what's good for you. That's my advice."

"My friend, I see you are getting angry. You ought always to avoid that. It places you at a disadvantage, you know. How much better it would be if you could emulate my example, and—"

"You blank old rubberneck, I've the greatest notion in the world to—"

"But wait a minute, my good sir. There's plenty of time yet. I was going to say that a man never ought to allow himself to become angry and excited over trifles. Bless your soul, I don't. If I see a fellow making a disgusting spectacle of himself I may take the liberty sometimes of telling him so, but I do it calmly and without any excitement, while, at the same time—what! Are you doing it again, you infernal beast? Haven't you the first instincts of a gentleman?"

"I'm doing it again, and I'll do it all I please, you blank old idiot. We'll see it—"

The other passenger swiftly unlimbered himself. He pulled the window down with a jerk. Then he stood over the man with the dyed chin beard and short black pipe.

"As I took occasion to observe a moment ago," he said, "a man should never allow himself to become angry or excited when he is discussing things with a fellow-man, but if you raise that window again while I am in this car, I'll take the greatest pleasure in throwing you through it, you hideous reptile. You haven't the decency of a hyena! You are a loathsome, repulsive thing in human shape! Now, don't you open your mouth at me or I'll smash it! Don't you look at me or I shall forget myself and put a different aspect on your face, you nasty, abominable beast!"

Then the other passengers, seeing that the man with the pipe was thoroughly subdued, hastened to crowd around his sabbard and pat him on the back and tell him he had done just right and that it was what they had often thought of doing themselves.

Why You Should Eat Spinach.

Prominent specialists claim that spinach is the most precious of vegetables, on account of its medicinal and strengthening properties. The emollient and laxative virtues of spinach, owing probably to the salts of potassium it contains, have been long known. It is excellent for the liver, and as a consequence, freshens the complexion. Some vegetables contain a relatively large dose of iron. According to Boissingault, the proportion is 0.00074 of iron in 100 parts of French beans, 0.00083 in 100 parts of lentils, and in spinach very much larger. The chemist Binge has proved that spinach and yolk of egg are proportionately richer in digestible and assimilable iron than all the most renowned ferruginous remedies. Its great value and growing importance are shown in the fact that spinach is already an active ingredient in several new and very valuable tonics.—Good Literature.

Cherry Salad.

Stone half a pound of cherries and save all the juice. Take the whitest leaves of a nice head of lettuce and wash them thoroughly. Slice a small cucumber and chop fine a dozen blanched almonds. Mix all gently together, arrange on the lettuce leaves, and pour over a dressing made of a gill of cherry juice, two tablespoonfuls of lemon juice, a drop or two of almond extract and four tablespoonfuls of sugar. Serve very cold.—Good Housekeeping.

PORTO RICANS AS SERVANTS IN HAWAII

They Are Replacing the Chinese in Honolulu Households

YOU may think neither servant question nor servant-girl need trouble in that dolci fa niente land. With an outdoor life possible the year round, waters abounding in fish that one may eat raw just as well as not, with the bread fruit tree, 20 different kinds of bananas, mangoes, custard apples, pomegranates, berries, grape fruit, oranges, limes, papayas, guavas, all sorts of delicious fruit, might not one get along without cook or chambermaid? No, not in the twentieth century, even in Hawaii.

Some establishments, and those not pretentious ones, either, find at least four house servants necessary. On the plantation where I lived there was Johnny, the cook, a clean, unctuous, stout Jap, who ruled over the cookhouse with undisputed sway (Johnny of blessed memory, he that concocted superexcellent banana fritters and unsurpassable taro cakes). Then there was Tatsu, a wrinkled, old, old Jap, who swept and polished and repaired; filled the vases with fresh flowers, amused the children, fed the chickens, made the butter, attended to all the left-overs. Little Sahto, too doll-like for her hard work, washed two days in the week and ironed three. Last, the elegant "student," Ben Nakadjo, who stooped to the position of steward (sort of second girl) only for the time being; served for no pay and for the furtherance of his study of English, without which he could not hope for success when later he should enter commercial life. But Ben's gentility did not hinder him from doing his work properly.

Which makes the better servant, Jap or Chinaman, I am at a loss to say. The Jap is intelligent, the Chinaman a wonderfully apt imitator; the Jap has a great deal of manner, the Chinaman is quiet and unobtrusive; the Jap is fickle, changes places often; the Chinaman is faithful, likes to stay with a good mistress. On the whole, I prefer John.

Lucky indeed is the mistress that has a good Chinese servant, for there is no better in the world—and no worse is there than a bad one, says a coolie fresh from the fields. But take a boy just come over, put him into the hands of a good housekeeper; let in a few weeks you will have help, in a year a paragon. Several I have known pass in review before me—Joe, Ah Lee, Ding Kit, Wing Fat, Ah Oi. Alas! that they are soon to be numbered with the things that have been and are no more.

Uncle Sam does not look kindly on the Hawaiian orientals. They are not allowed to send back to the Flowery Kingdom for their sisters, cousins, aunts, wives and sweethearts, and are beginning to desire to return to the girls they left behind.

The seal of the department of justice is very handsomely painted, and the origin of the motto has puzzled many good Latinists of the present day.

Perhaps the most striking object in this exhibit is a beautiful female figure representing justice, which was designed from suggestions made by Maj. Frank Strong. She holds the traditional scales in one hand and an unsheathed sword in the other. Maj. Strong, in spite of the sterner duties of his profession, is a fine artist, and has with his own brush painted a number of beautiful pictures.

There is a collection of autograph letters in the exhibit from former presidents of the United States, including some from President McKinley, showing evidence of their clemency towards convicted persons.

Fine photographs of the prisoners of the United States are exhibited.

The scope of the exhibit is necessarily small, but it is one of absorbing interest, especially to the more cultured classes. This exhibit has been collected by Maj. Frank Strong, the general agent for the department of justice and the representative on the government board for the Pan-American exposition.

DEPARTMENT of JUSTICE at the PAN-AMERICAN

The Exhibit Made is of Unusual Interest to the Lawyer Visitors

THE exhibit of the department of justice is of especial interest to the lawyers who visit the exposition. The exhibit includes the portraits of all the chief justices of the United States, from John Jay to Melville W. Fuller, forming a group of highly intellectual men. In the collection at the exposition there is a series of portraits of the great John Marshall taken at different periods of his illustrious career. The portrait of Roger B. Tanney also is especially interesting on account of his famous Dread Scott Decision. The strong face of Salmon P. Chase, chief justice of the supreme court of the United States, by the lamented Lincoln, also excites a great deal of interest. The picture of the supreme court room of the United States, now occupying one of the wings of the United States capital, but soon to occupy a position in the magnificent temple of justice on Capitol Hill, is also shown in this exhibit together with the artist's plans for the temple of justice. Portraits of the attorneys general of the United States, painted in oil, form one of the most attractive features of this exhibit.

One great attraction of this exhibit is the collection of law books. These include the opinions of the attorney general, the statutes at large of the United States, many volumes of colonial laws and some rare old law books which will be examined with especial interest and pleasure not only by scholarly lawyers, but by everyone who has read history. For example, here are 11 volumes of "State Trials for Heresy and High Treason," by Francis Hargrave, Esq., published in London in 1776. These volumes contain a verbatim report of all the great trials of Great Britain from the reign of Richard II. to that of George III. It is like turning over the pages of romance to read, as the visitors to the exposition will be able to do, the trial of Mary, queen of Scots; of Sir Walter Raleigh; of King Charles I., of Archbishop Cranmer, of Titus Oates, the learned Jesuit priest who plead his own cause before Lord Chief Justice Jeffries; of Capt. William Kidd, the noted pirate, who roamed up and down the Atlantic seaboard and infested the West Indies before the great American republic existed! These are a few that are included in the volumes brought to the exposition. In the same volume are noted the rulings of Lord Chief Justice Coke and of the notorious Lord Chief Justice Jeffries. There are other old legal authorities that cannot fail to delight the antiquarian, the scholar and the student. Among these is the first edition of Blackstone's Commentaries printed on the North American continent in 1771.

The seals of the United States and of the different departments of the government are shown in this exhibit. The seal of the department of justice is very handsomely painted, and the origin of the motto has puzzled many good Latinists of the present day.

Perhaps the most striking object in this exhibit is a beautiful female figure representing justice, which was designed from suggestions made by Maj. Frank Strong. She holds the traditional scales in one hand and an unsheathed sword in the other. Maj. Strong, in spite of the sterner duties of his profession, is a fine artist, and has with his own brush painted a number of beautiful pictures.

There is a collection of autograph letters in the exhibit from former presidents of the United States, including some from President McKinley, showing evidence of their clemency towards convicted persons.

Fine photographs of the prisoners of the United States are exhibited.

The scope of the exhibit is necessarily small, but it is one of absorbing interest, especially to the more cultured classes. This exhibit has been collected by Maj. Frank Strong, the general agent for the department of justice and the representative on the government board for the Pan-American exposition.

KAKALINA KANE.

PEOPLE NEXT DOOR.

BY CAROLINE S. MAHONEY.

About three weeks ago some new neighbors moved in next door. I had seen them several days before inspecting the premises, and from a certain swagger that characterized the male member, an evident disposition on his part to criticize the neighborhood, in short, a general fault-finding air, I concluded that he at least was English, and I began at once to wonder if his sympathies lay with the poor downtrodden Boers, and had come to this land of the free just for spite. I felt that I could forgive him much if his heart warmed to the Boers.

Anyhow, they appeared to be very nice people, and I thought the wife looked quite unlike the pen picture Max O'Rell drew of the British matron for the newspaper syndicates, and felt instinctively that she and I would be such good friends as to disprove all of his absurd notions about English and American women hating each other. Besides, I liked the way her somewhat given fitted, despite the fact that she was missing the lowered spine and kangaroo hump which give our present day fashionable women a tailor-made look and blackface. Her pompadour was not the conventional two-story affair, but the feathers that decorated her headgear were beyond criticism, which is not always the case with the would-be ultra swells, as you know.

After all, it must be admitted that clothes have a good deal to do with those historical first impressions, and it seems to me that all people should put their best foot foremost, so to speak, when it comes to adjusting the evolutionary, rather revolutionized, big leat.

From the very first I was predisposed to like that pretty little wife; she was so trim, so neat and patient-looking, not that I admire too much patience in women, mind you, for they often use it past the virtue stage. However, from unavoidably overhearing some of that husband's conversation, seeing the wise wags of his head, which denoted finally and a virulent form of pigheadedness, I realized that she, poor dear, needed to be long on patience, and I drew some comparisons between American and British husbands that would make the most phlegmatic American product himself with delight: And, right here, I warn all Britons, even the nobleman, that they needn't pro—but that's another story.

As I said before these newcomers seemed to be genteel people, though the first thing I noticed was that they kept no servant, and I had no reason to suspect that the wife did all the washing and scrubbing, and I could not for the life of me find out if they paid rent in advance. But I didn't talk about them; that is, not where they could hear it; for I'm careful about hurting people's feelings. I tried to cultivate charity—it was Lent, you know—and I really wanted to feel friendly toward that man just for his wife's sake. I must confess, and I argued that probably my deep-seated prejudice against the sex had made me unjust to the individual, and I detest narrow-minded people.

But soon something happened that completely upset my generous frame of mind and confirmed my bad opinion of him, and you may believe that I anatomized him, and I cared him roundly to myself. It was this: One evening about dusk I saw that frail-looking, dork-eyed little wife totting home with the family groceries. I knew right then that he was not doing his duty by her, and I wanted to put my head out the window and tell him so, for if there is one thing that I enjoy more than another it is in seeing that other people do their duty—as for myself, that's another matter. However, from that day on I kept an eye on that ignoble man when he was about home—and, between us, I've no doubt that he, like other men, needed an eye on him when away from home as well—and was just waiting for a chance to tell him what I thought of him, and how different American husbands are, even if I had not been introduced. I don't stand on ceremony when I have a piece of my mind to deliver.

From my south window I looked right down on this, as I thought, unhappy household; consequently I learned many family secrets; still, I didn't talk. Telling other people's secrets is such bad form, you know.

About this time they began to improve their house, and I don't mind saying that it needed it badly, although I would not remark this to others—and I, having acute perceptions concerning affairs not my own, readily suspected that they were preparing for important visitors. An observant person whose imagination does not belong to a syndicate, can usually form an approximate idea of the standing of an expected guest by the nature and amount of preparation made for him or her.

Consequently, I most earnestly hoped it was his mother-in-law—the accredited regulator of all unsatisfactory husbands—for I was sure that she would see things as I saw them, and not only think as I thought, but act as I wanted to act toward that British husband.

Of course they had not told me that they expected visitors—they are very reticent—but I knew it, just because I knew it, and I sat by my window and watched, for I wanted to see what the guests would look like. I was consumed with fear lest they arrive in the night and I not see them. That would have filled my cup with bitterness, for that very morning I had caught the man eyeing me maliciously when I peeped through the blinds, and, from his very look, I knew that he thought I was wild with curiosity—so like a man!

But, as you know, I was not fond of that man, and when I don't care for a person that person's opinion of me neither affects my sleep nor digestion, so I turned the blinds with a snap and waited until I thought he had gone from the house. Then like any other normal woman I stationed myself where I could have a good view, and became so interested that I really hoped the wife, in the master's absence, would let me be neighborly and loan her anything she might need for the comfort of her company, and, besides, I wanted to be on hand and get a glimpse of the expected visitors before that willful husband saw them.

This morning I heard a great noise at my neighbor's house. I rushed to the window, threw it open and—what do you think I saw?

That impertinent husband, who had suspected me of curiosity, was just outside the house, straining his vocal organs in an effort to awaken me, who had waited so long and watched so patiently, and let me know that in the night the guests had come, and I peeped cautiously behind my window blind and saw four fuzzy little yellow-beaked sparrows.—Sunny South.

Slow Talker, Perhaps.

He—I know I'm late, dear. You see, I was detained a couple of hours by an old friend who just got back to town after a long absence. I had to tell him all I knew.

She (snappishly)—I don't see why that should have kept you so long.—Philadelphia Press.

GOOD AND BAD MILKERS.

Why Dairymen Should Make Occasional Tests of the Milk from All Their Cows.

At a milking trial held in connection with one of the recent summer shows in England the cow which was awarded the first prize produced over six gallons of milk in the day, and her milk was so rich in quality that it produced over four pounds of butter. At the same show there were on exhibition other cows of the same breed and practically the same size and weight which produced only two to three gallons of milk and barely one pound of butter. It would be a mistake to suppose that the feeding of one of the last-named would cost as much as the six-gallon cow, because, as a rule, the better milker a cow is the more food will she consume. It is only natural that a cow yielding six gallons of milk should require a much more liberal food ration than one producing less than half that quantity. The difference in the cost of feeding the cows in question would not, however, be anything like so marked as their relative milk yields would suggest. In practice it is found that cows producing only 1 1/2 gallons to two gallons—that is, six to eight quarts—per day cost as much to keep as those yielding double that quantity. It is only when calculations of this kind are gone into that the difference between good and bad milkers can be properly estimated. At least occasional tests should be made of the milk which all the cows in the herd are producing, and a similar test should be made of the food which they are consuming, and if it is found, as it is to be feared will be only too frequently the case, that the animals are not giving a sufficient return for the cost of the food which they are disposing of, they should be got rid of at the first opportunity and their places filled by others capable of giving a better return for the food.—Farmers' Gazette.

GOOD PASTURE FENCE.

Its Inventor, a North Dakota Man, Has Used One for Three Years with Satisfaction.

A cheap fence for cows and calves at pasture can be made as sketched. Take two-foot posts (a a), sharpen, drive in the ground a rod apart, leaving eight inches above ground. Fasten a smooth wire (b b) on top of posts with staple (c c). A cow is tied to a rope about 15 feet long. Fasten a block six by six inches 2 1/2 or three feet long to rope. Attach rope in center (d) of end of stick with staple. I have used this sort of a fence with satisfaction three years. I used four-foot cordwood sawed in half for posts. The longer the rope used the further the cow can graze.—J. Peterson, in Farm and Home.

WATER AFFECTS MILK.

Therefore the Farmer Who Lets His Cows Drink from a Stagnant Pool Commits a Crime.

We hear some things that we find hard to believe in the way of the treatment of dairy cows. One of these things is that there are here and there pastures in which the only watering place is a stagnant pond full of insects and slimy grasses. It is a wonder that cows can drink such stuff and still remain healthy, but it is certain that they take chances on acquiring some one of the water-borne diseases common to stock. No human being should be asked to drink milk made out of such water, even after it has been strained through the cow. It is claimed that other owners are known to water their cows out of rain water barrels. Well, that is only a slight improvement over the stagnant pond method. The water in the rain water barrel soon takes on a smell that is disagreeable to man and beast. Why can't our cows have at least pure water to drink? Water, pure and sparkling, enters very largely into the life of every being. Let us be sure that the milk we drink is made from water and food absolutely pure.—Farmers' Review.

Neufchatel Cheese Making.
Neufchatel is a soft, white, and, as generally eaten, entirely uncurd cheese, resembling in name only the celebrated Neufchatel cheese of Switzerland. Very briefly and exactly we may define it as unskimmed milk, coagulated with rennet, allowed to stand until sour, the surplus whey removed by drainage and pressure, after which the resulting curd is salted to taste and molded into the familiar little cylinders of the stores. This is an outline of the process, but the questions of ripeness of milk, amount of rennet, length of time it stands before draining and the pressure to be applied are not easily explained on paper, and they constitute the art of Neufchatel making.

GLASS BRIC-A-BRAC.

Glass, though proverbially brittle, will stand any amount of hard usage; but once it is broken the only thing that remains to be done is to throw it away. Cementing will not do much good.

Glass that has been properly annealed will stand variations of temperature perfectly well, but if this hasn't been done it is likely to break instantly and without apparent reason.

Frequently globes and chimneys fly to pieces when not properly heated. This is due to draught or moisture upon the chimney, especially lamp chimneys, which will crack from top to bottom even after the lamp has been extinguished.

Glass vases used for flowers frequently become coated with an unpleasant deposit in the inaccessible parts of the inside. This is due to decayed stems of flowers that are left too long in the water. This deposit may be removed by cleaning with a cloth that has been dipped in pumice-stone powder.

STAND BY BOTH METALS.

Several big democrats scattered about over the country, are expressing themselves about what the next national democratic platform should contain. Several of them believe that the silver plank should be left out that it is now no issue and will not be in 1904. We believe that any and all democrats, have a right to express themselves before the meeting of the State or national convention, as to what their platforms should contain.

Democrats meet and will make their own platforms and put in them what they think is best and in line with the principles of the party.

The great leaders in the party have a right express themselves on any issue that is before the American people, and they have a right to say what should be put in a national platform, and what should be left out.

They are now expressing themselves on what should be the financial policy of the next national conversation.

Some of them express themselves that the silver question should be left out entirely.

Right here is where we believe they are wrong.

Every democratic national convention should express itself fully and freely on this important issue. And every time, it should declare for the free coinage of both gold and silver. This is democratic doctrine and always will be.

Let the party leave out all foolishness and declare for what the people want.

The American people are in favor of the free coinage of both metals, and always will be, and the statesman who undertakes to relegate one metal to the rear, and put the other in front, will be very much disappointed.

Let the democrats stand by their old time doctrines on the money question and they will make no mistake.

There seems to be some speculation about over the district as to who will make up the race for appellate judge. On this side of the river Judge White and Judge Robbins will be the only candidates. There will be several others on the other side, but their names are not now all known. This will be a pretty lively tussell and its progress will be watched with much interest by the friends of all the aspirants.

The people in and about Mayfield are buying vegetables at less prices than anywhere else in the country. The prices are over three times higher in all the cities now than they were this time last year. They are a luxury now in the cities and none but the rich can use them.

Ollie James was at the Bardwell Convention Saturday and made a speech for congress and in the interest of democratic harmony. He is now actively engaged in his race for congress.

Senator Mc D. Ferguson was renominated for State Senator at Bardwell Saturday night, over Davis, Shemwell and Dance. This will be his second term from that district.

Fever Situation.

The all absorbing question now is, or should be, how to avert an epidemic of typhoid fever this fall. Up to the present the doctors report more typhoid than for the past eight years, and at the present rate of increase, it seems that an epidemic of the disease is inevitable. All persons, residing in the city confines and out, should be awake to the fact. Our city dads should be on the alert. It is a matter of vital importance to one and all, as a general epidemic of the disease would put Mayfield ten years behind herself at present. The season for the disease is not yet upon us, yet we are having an increase daily, and when September comes look for an epidemic.

Who and what is responsible for the large increase of this year? Is it the long, dry, heated season? Is it that our people are not careful enough about their premises in regard to old rubbish and waste matter? Is it that our streets, which are covered with filth from one month end to another, has anything to do with it? Is it that the absence of a good sewerage system is responsible for it? If so, let us proceed to remedy same. If the long dry season caused it, let us get the other fellow to do the imploring to Him who contracted it; if it is the residents, send a policeman into every home and make them clean up; if it is our streets, then the city dads should have them cleaned at once and by all means, and if from want of good sewerage, let's bond ourselves to any amount necessary to put in a good sewerage system, good streets, build good city hall, fire house and city prison, and then, but not till then, will you see the city blossom as a rose and her people at work like bees to get out of debt.

Don't be satisfied with temporary relief from indigestion. Kodol Dyspepsia Cure permanently and completely removes this complaint. It relieves permanently because it allows the tired stomach perfect rest. Dieting won't rest the stomach. Nature receives supplies from the food we eat. The sensible way to help the stomach is to use Kodol Dyspepsia Cure, which digests what you eat and can't help but do you good. T. A. Weldon.

"Wait Until My Debts are Paid."

A man may be perfectly solvent when he dies— Assets twice or four times his liabilities— but without ready cash to meet the persistent demands for prompt payment the estate has to be sacrificed and widow and orphans are left penniless— The man who is in debt is the very man who most needs the protection of life assurance— The proceeds of an Equitable policy have saved many an estate from bankruptcy.
