ROBBERS’ ROOST

by ZANE GREY

SYNOPSIS

Jim Wall, the schoolteacher of Rhyolite, was not used to the rough and tumble of the meanest of hellholes. But because that was what Rhyolite was, the lanky, bespectacled young man just marched into the roaring, gun-slinging town and took Rhyolite on. And Rhyolite took him on. Was Rhyolite wise or was it just plain rough? Jim Wall was about to find out.

"Sawbones, it’s a holy job," muttered Jim. "I can’t stand the thought of men being hurt and never having a chance at proper treatment. But I don’t want to be a part of this. It’s too dangerous. I don’t want to get hurt or killed."

"Well, you’ll have to stand it if you’re going to stay," was the reply. "This is a rough town. No man can get away with being soft."

"I’ll do my best. I’ll try to keep off the road if I can."

"You’ll have to try to keep off the road if you want to keep alive," came the warning. "The people here are rough. They don’t care whether you live or die."

Jim Wall, though, was determined not to let the roughness of Rhyolite get the better of him. He decided to stick it out and try to make a difference in the lives of the people he served. It was a tall order, but Jim Wall was up to the challenge.

The next day, Jim Wall decided to go out on his own and make some observations of the town. He wanted to see for himself what conditions were like and what he could do to improve them.

He walked down the main street of Rhyolite, observing the people and the surroundings. He saw the dirt and the trash and the dilapidated buildings. He saw the poverty and the suffering. He knew he had a job to do.

Jim Wall decided to start by cleaning up the streets. He spent his free time collecting trash and writing letters to the town’s leaders, begging them to improve the conditions. He knew it wouldn’t be easy, but he was determined to try.

Jim Wall’s efforts didn’t go unnoticed. The people of Rhyolite began to feel a little bit better about their town. They saw a change and they appreciated it. Jim Wall was making a difference.

But Jim Wall knew that he couldn’t do it alone. He needed the support of the townspeople. He decided to organize them and work together to make Rhyolite a better place.

Jim Wall’s efforts paid off. He was able to get the town’s leaders to improve the conditions. He was able to get the townspeople to work together for a better Rhyolite. Jim Wall’s job was far from over, but he knew that he was making a difference. He was making Rhyolite a place that people could be proud of.

The next chapter:

"Well, how’s it going?"

"It’s going well. We’ve made some progress. But there’s still a lot to do."

"I’m glad to hear it. Keep up the good work."

"I will. I’m determined to make Rhyolite a better place."

Jim Wall walked down the street, feeling a sense of pride and accomplishment. He knew that he had a long way to go, but he was determined to keep going. He knew that he had the support of the townspeople. He knew that he was making a difference.

And Jim Wall was right. He was making a difference. He was making Rhyolite a better place. He was proving that one man could make a difference. And he was determined to keep proving it.
