THUNDER AND LIGHTNING. Theories of Old-Time Scientists in Regard to These Phenomena About the middle of the last century, through the genius of Franklin, lightning became identified with common or frictional electricity, but the language referring to this great natural force continued to be the same as when men were ignorant of its nature. They spoke, as we still speak, of a thunderstorm, and of thund r and lightning, and thus, as in other cases, mistook, as we continue to do, at least in our mode of speech, the effect for the cause. It is commonly said that the thunder turns sult. Internal nervous vibrations and to sourness the milk and the beer, that there is thunder in the air, and the singeing of a tree by lightning "was due to the thunder last night," as its owners informed me a few weeks ago. Even Scott, in "The Heart of Midlothian," chapter XLV., speaks of "the shattered and thunder-splitten peaks of Arran.

Our gratitude is due to those gifted men who have been able to divest natural phenomena of the ignorance and superstition that formerly incumbered them, and so to bring them under the dominion of scientific laws which appeal to the good sense of all students of nature.

"I cannot imagine why I am so tired all the time. It seems to me that I do very little," said a woman, dragging do for you?" herself to a chair and sitting down wearily.

"How many times a day do you go up and down stairs?" inquired a friend. The house was in a city, high and narrow, with four long stairways, three of which intervened between the kitchen and the mother's own room."

"Why, not very often; I don't know, I have a good many errands about the house, here and there, and my impulse is usually to wait on myself. I suppose I spend a good deal of strength on the stairs, now that I think of it."

"And, pardon the suggestion, but you are always looking out for others so much and so generously, that others ought to look out for you; have you ever thought how often you are interrupted in the progress of a day? The ordering of the house is the first thing, but some trifle is forgotten, pepper or salt, flavor or seasoning, and you are consulted about that. Then your big boy comes to you with his necktie and his cuffs, and your four-year-old has pinched his finger and needs comforting; your daughters have no end of affairs in which you must be the counselor, and your husband leaves the weight of his perplexities and the irritability that grows out of his overwork on your ever-ready strength. Dear, it is not wonderful that you are tired! The
