NUMBER TWENTY-NINE

FARM BUREAU IN ANNUAL MEETING HERE THIS FRIDAY

This Friday the Fulton County Farm Bureau will hold its annual picnic and barbecue at the Fair Grounds in Fulton, and a most unusual program has been arranged for farmers and their friends who will attend this meeting.

Besides the membership of the county bureau, visiting delegates are expected to attend from Hickman, Ballard and Carlisle counties. None of these counties has Farm Bureau organizations, and plans for setting up bureaus in their respective counties will be discussed at the annual meeting here.

Many interesting games and contests will provide entertainment, such as foot races, stock calling and husband calling contests, soft ball games, horse-shoe and washer pitching.

Joe Davis, of Fulton, is scheduled to act as toastmaster during the speaking program. M. B. Nugent, director of farm bureau insurance, Ben Kilgore, executive secretary of the State Farm Bureau, J. Frank Porter, president of the Tennessee Farm Bureau and Mrs. W. M. Oliver, president of the State Homemakers, are expected to make interesting talks on subjects fitting for the occasion.

Dinner, which will include barbecued meats, will be served during the noon hour.

Mr. Tom McClellan is on the sick list.

It is of real sorrow we write of the passing of one of our good citizens, in the very prime of life, R. Wall Jr. He was quiet, rather retiring, in fact, never pushed him self forward, yet there are few men who actually served the community and their fellowmen as did Mr. Wall. He was ready and willing to aid any good cause, to listen to the cry of distress, to help those in need and trouble. He was a kind and good father and husband, a supporter of the church, and on his eight year service as County Superintendent of Schools, ready to advise any teacher at any time. He was well liked and appreciated by all who knew him. Mr. Wall was only forty four years of age at the time of his death. He is survived by his wife one son and one daughter. Namely, Joseph Barnett and Martha Jane. One sister, Mrs. Lee Atwill of Chicago and two brothers, Frank and Almus of Cayce. A host of relatives and friends who mourn his going. Rev. P. T. McClarin conducted funeral services which were held Sunday at three P. M. at Cayce M. E. Church, after which the Masonic order conducted their services. He was laid to rest in Cayce Cemetery beneath a mound of flowers contributed by relatives and friends.

In the city election held last Saturday in connection with the Democratic Primary, five new members were elected and one old member re-elected to compose a council of six men. Thirteen candidates were out on the council ticket from which the people selected six when they casted their votes Saturday.

The driver was said to have been talking, and when a car approached from behind, he looked back, taking his eye from the road for a moment. The loose gravel on the road was responsible for the sudden swerving and overturning of the car.

CITY COUNCIL IN REGULAR SESSION

The Fulton city council met in regular session Monday night with the mayor, with all members present except W. P. Murrel. Several important business matters were taken up, and bills approved.

An ordinance placing a license tax upon laundries was passed by the council. Tax on local laundries was placed at $25 yearly, and out of town laundries doing business here at $300 yearly.

The council discussed plans for securing work projects for Fulton, and decided to employ an engineer to prepare suitable projects for submission to the Works Progress Authority at Louisville. W. M. Great-house, of Madisonville was present and explained the proper procedure to take in obtaining projects. He said that only projects of less than $25,000 could be carried out through the federal works program. Only local help will be employed.

Two important projects are now under consideration by the council, which if carried out will be of material benefit to the city. A project will be sought the Harris Fork creek, which flows through the heart of Fulton and overflows suddenly when heavy rains fall, will carry the waters away without subjecting business places and residences to flood waters.

Another project calls improving the Mears-street back of Lake St. This proposal would pave Mears-st, drain it to the center with storm sewers, and open up a first class street which would take some of the traffic off of Lake-st.

THE RED CROSS STEPS IN

There is one American institution which stands as a model for the whole world. That is the American Red Cross. The peculiar function of the Red Cross is to bring aid to sufferers from physical disasters. The disaster may be due to the incidence of war, or the calamities such as usually termed "acts of God" in the popular mind, perhaps the relief service of the Red Cross in war stands out as typifying its work. But the greatest service of the Red Cross is to suffering humanity in times of peace. One has but to look at its record in recent years. The long arm of the Red Cross reached out to help the victims of more than one Mississippi flood, to the droughts which ravaged Arkansas and adjacent states five years ago, the unfortunates rendered homeless by hurricanes in the South and in Porto Rico, among others. Recently it has added to its laurels by its prompt and intelligent work in the flood-swept regions of New York State.

There is no delay about Red Cross aid in times of emergency. No red tape has to be cut. No politicians or other self-seekers have a finger in the pie. No breath of scandal has ever impugned either the motives of the Red Cross Administration or the integrity of those who handle its funds. Its money comes from voluntary contributions by millions of American citizens. Its organization is kept alive and flourishing by voluntary labors of tens of thousands of devoted men and women—mainly women. It has at its call trained, efficient medical and nursing talent, and able administrators competent to take charge of any situation. It cooperates with all Government agencies but is under the control of none of them.

We think that the administration of the huge relief funds set up by Federal and State Governments in times past could have been entrusted to the Red Cross for administration with more efficient and economical results than has been the case under political management. That however is beside the point. It is very much to the point, however, to suggest that it should be a matter of pride to every citizen to be able to feel that he or she has contributed to the support of "the greatest organization of mercy in the world."

GETTING OFF RELIEF

It is a healthy sign of the times when jobs become so plentiful in any part of the country that the relief rolls can be "purged" of able-bodied men who are now able to find work. That this condition should have been reached first in the wheat-growing states is not surprising. South Dakota began it by dropping 19,000 heads of families from the dole, because of the great demand for harvest workers in the wheat fields. According to reports from Washington, it is expected that at least 100,000 men who have been on relief will be dropped from the rolls in the principal wheat states.

Naturally, some of those who are not going to like it. After a man has been getting money for doing nothing, it is hard to go back to work, especially if he gets no more for working than he did for loafing.

The disgruntled few who prefer idleness to work are already beginning to make a loud noise about the "injustice" of taking them off relief. Some of the reports which we have seen in the big city newspapers, especially in the East, are calculated to give the impression that practically all of the recipients of relief in the wheat states are sore because a way has been opened to them to earn their living instead of subsisting on the public bounty. We do not believe that is true. We are not convinced that the moral fiber of the average American has deteriorated that far.

We can understand the reluctance of a man with a family to being dropped from relief when he has no assurance of getting back on again if his job turns out to be a temporary one, as jobs in the harvest field necessarily are. But we understand that Washington has given assurances that in such cases it will not be such a long and difficult process to get back on relief as it was to get on rolls in the first place. Sooner or later, the whole relief program must end. The money and the taxpayers' patience will give out. We are looking hopefully for a start on all fronts of the $4,000,000 Work Relief plan. Also, we are looking hopefully for an important speeding up of the wheels of private industry.

The situation in the wheat country is, however, encouraging as far as it goes.

THE ETHIOPIAN SITUATION

We are informed by the National Geographic Society that the proper name of that African kingdom against which Italy is making threatening gestures is "Ethiopia." We are glad to get that information. It is much easier to write "Ethiopia" or pronounce it than to say "Abyssinia."

Ethiopia is an insignificant little country, inhabited exclusively by dark-skinned people of several different racial origin. Officially it is a Christian nation, the religion of the ruling classes being Coptic, which is the oldest surviving Christian sect. Actually the Ethiopians have many religions, including primitive African Voodooism, Mohammedanism and Judaism. The tradition that the royal family of Ethiopia is directly descended from King Solomon and the Queen of Sheba, whose visit to the most famous ruler of the Israelites is described in the Bible, is firmly believed by the Ethiopians without very much evidence to back it up.

Why Mussolini seems bent on making war on Ethiopia is not quiet clear to anybody. The best guess seems to be that he is facing a popular uprising at home, which threatens his dictatorship, and embarked on his Ethiopian venture to divert the Italian people's minds from domestic troubles.

It is still clear, from this distance why England does not put a stop to Mussolini's war like joustures by the simple process of preventing the shipment of Italian soulders, munitions and war supplies through the Suez Canal.

The timidity with which European statesmen seem to be afraid of everybody else. We are lucky to be on this side of the Atlantic, and will be luckier still if we do not get dragged into the coming war.

WORK SELDOM KILLS.

Every year about this time we begin to see reports in the newspapers, of farmers dying from "sunstroke" while working in the fields. We hear such occurrences used as illustrations of the terrific hardships of the farmer's life of toil.

About this time of year, also, we begin to notice frequent reports in the city papers of men dropping dead on golf courses. We have seldom heard anyone suggest that the golfer's life must be a terrible one, because so many men die at the game.

One is work, the other is play. There is a wide-spread belief that all work is dangerous to health and longevity while all play is beneficial. We have heard—we don't know how many—sentimental songs, and have read innumerable stories and magazine articles, all conveying the implication that work in its self is a life-shortening crippling and generally unwholesome thing. We have heard many young men excuse their laziness by declaring "I don't intend to kill my self working!" the same young men or their type will spend hours in the broiling sun, batting tennis balls across a net. About as violent work as anyone can do.

We are strongly of the opinion that there is nothing injurious to health in work alone. We have observed numerous individuals who have spent fairly long lives in pretty hard and steady work, and who are still alive and healthy. The persons to whom work is injurious, as nearly as we can figure it out are the unfortunate ones whose health has been impaired by disease. It is much more likely that the knots on Grandma's finger-joints come from bad teeth or infected tonsils than that they were caused by exercise at the washboard. The victim of "sunstroke" most likely had a bad heart to start with, perhaps from an infantile case of scarlet fever.

Too much encouragement is being given, it seems to us, to the notion that work is a bad thing for people and that play should be the chief object of life.

REDDY KILOWATT COMES TO TOWN

All-powerful and amazingly talented despite his whimsical appearance, Reddy Kilowatt, "your electrical servant," appears locally for the first time in the Kentucky Utilities Company advertisement in this issue of THE NEWS.

Reddy Kilowatt is the power little fellow behind the electrical switch, and though unseen, he is a third stronger than the average horse. A flip of the switch brings him out to work and still he never is in sight.

Reddy Kilowatt is a pleasant young chap. His bright face is always smiling. He has an enlightened nose; a receptive ear, and that ear is always open to hear the stories of work needed to be done in the home, for his willing hands are always ready to perform those task. His hands are never without gloves, which let him do the roughest and hardest tasks safely. His lightning body shows how fast he works—like a flash.

(cut of Reddy Kilowatt here)
Reddy Kilowatt lives where he works. He is there every day. He occupies the home as well as the workshop, making himself a valuable member of the household by always being ready. The servants in the home are better servants because Reddy helps them do their work better. Where there are no servants he hops in to help the wife at all her daily tasks.

Reddy Kilowatt says, "I am the master servant of all. I work 24 hours a day, seven days a week if called upon. I eat nothing; I require no quarters—no place to sleep."

"I help cook meals, heat the water, wash the clothes and dishes, take care of food, clean the house, do the ironing and aid in a hundred other tasks."

"Out on the farm I help do all of the chores, saw the wood, pump the water and even milk the cows."

"My one ambition in life is to make the home brighter, work easier, and provide more time for recreation, reading, comfort and rest. I'm glad to be here. Use me whenever you desire. I work cheaply."

Miss Betty Norris visited last week in Marion, Ill., the guest of Mrs. Woodrow Hicks.

Mrs. Joe Gwaltney of Nashville, Tenn., has been visiting in Fulton with friends and parents.

Take mildness for one thing—how does it measure up for mildness?

Chesterfields are milder—not flat or insipid, of course, but with a pleasing flavor.

Chesterfields taste better—not strong but just right.

'The Divorce Court Murder'

By Milton Propper

TENTH INSTALMENT

SYNOPSIS—Barbara Keith, wife of a prominent Philadelphia business man, is murdered as she waits alone in a side room to testify in the divorce case of Rowland vs. Rowland. She was to have testified for the husband, a friend, who was defendant in the action. Detective Tommy Rankin is assigned to the case from police headquarters. His preliminary investigation disclosed that both Mr. and Mrs. Rowland had gathered evidence against the other of infidelity. The will of Mrs. Rowland's first husband directed her lawyer brother, Mr. Willard, to handle the estate until she remarried when the new husband was to come into control. Detective Rankin finds motives and the evidence of guilt for the murder of Mrs. Keith, leading to the doors of virtually all of the principals involved. These principals are, the two Rowlands, Mr. Willard, Mr. Keith, husband of the murdered woman, Hugh Campbell, paranoiac of Mrs. Rowland, and his underworld confederates.—NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY.

The detective could not decide whether to believe the story or not. "Do you know, whether Mrs. Keith ever visited Allerton, Indiana? Abruptly Rankin shifted the subject.

The other shook his head. "Allerton? Certainly not in the four years since we met; before that she may have been there. She never mentioned it. Why do you ask?"

I found an empty bottle with an old label from a hospital in that town in her medicine closet. It had contained Pyraminon."

Rankin bent toward him to emphasize the importance of his next question.

"Isn't it a fact, Mr. Keith, that in spite of your liberal allowance and income, your wife was always pressed for funds?"

Mortimer Keith looked startled. "How could you guess that, Rankin?" he exclaimed. "It's true she worried about money, and often approached me for more, for charities and clothes. Once I questioned her about it, and she made some vague excuse about losing it in stocks."

"Perhaps this will explain her expenditures," Rankin said, "these check-stubs and cancelled checks."

As he studied them, Mr. Keith's lips tightened into a formidable line, and his eyes flashed in features darkened by a swift anger.

"Steady payments like this for two years," he cried harshly, "at last, as if she were being blackmailed to prevent me from learning some secret about her."

They certainly suggest that," Rankin said, in disappointed tones. "You had no knowledge of them or to whom or for what reason she drew them?"

"No, this is my first inkling of them."

"Were you aware, sir, that Mrs. Keith would be a witness in the son's office, yesterday?" Mr. Keith shook his head. "Not until I read where she met her death."

"Had you any idea," Rankin asked, "how she happened to accompany young Rowland, two weeks ago, and be in a position to give evidence for him?"

"I still don't understand how she ever permitted herself to become involved in such a vulgar public scandal," the manufacturer rasped out. "Did you know Mrs. Keith was going out that Wednesday night at all?"

"Yes, she was to visit her physician, who attends her when her headaches become particularly vicious. Dr. Anton Brantman on Pine Street. I didn't pay any attention to when she left or returned home."

"Then, Mr. Keith, what was your connection with the Rowland divorce action?"

At the abruptness with which the detective shot this question the other gazed at him in perplexity and surprise.

"My connection?" he repeated wonderingly. "I don't follow you, Rankin; I haven't the slightest interest in it."

Rankin's voice rang with the vigor or he put into his unexpected offensive.

"In that case," he demanded, "what were you doing at sunset Inn, the evening of February first—when Mrs. Rowland discovered her husband in compromising relations with her secretary there?"

If it was Tommy Rankin's intention to startle the manufacturer by his sudden query, he succeeded admirably.

"How in the world did you find that out?" he finally asked in a dry voice.

Rankin saw no harm in answering. "It came out at the hearing that you reached the Inn just after Mrs. Rowland's party and witnessed the interruption of her husband's affairs."

"Well, it . . . all happened quiet accidentally. . . I had no warning of what was happening," the other floundered. "I was driving to New York alone that night, and when I reached Quakertown, I decided to sleep there because it was so late. I had left Philadelphia at about . . ."

Obviously he was stalling for time. "That won't wash, Mr. Keith," the detective answered curtly. "You surely don't hope to persuade me your presence was only a coincidence?"

Mr. Keith compressed his lips. "Yes, of course that's ridiculous. The truth is, I have no explanation to offer; I can't tell you why I went there."

It was Rankin's turn to be taken aback, and he started incredulously, as though he had not heard aright. "You can't tell me, Mr. Keith?" he said harshly. "You mean you won't?"

"Have it any way you like, Rankin," his opponent returned, firmly.

"It concerns me alone and can't possibly be of interest to the authorities. It is a private matter I prefer not to discuss."

"Mr. Keith," Rankin cried sharply, "do you realize what your refusal means? Nothing is private in a murder case; and I am investigating the murder of some one near to you—your wife."

The manufacturer winced. "If it had any relation to the crime at all, promise you I wouldn't hesitate to speak out, Rankin."

"I'm the best judge of what is pertinent to the case and what isn't, Mr. Keith."

But Mortimer Keith shook his head. "I'm sorry I can't oblige," he said more gently.

The detective had to acknowledge defeat in his effort to discover the secret of Mr. Keith's visit to Sunset Inn. The man stood clearly within his rights in not answering.

Leaving Cottman on guard, the detective returned to headquarters. "That fellow Campbell Gordon's been hunting has shown up, Tommy," the captain announced. "He came in and asked for you of his own accord, twenty minutes ago."

Rankin began by ignoring the hand Campbell pondered, and the visitor flushed.

"Sit down, Campbell," he invited blandly. "I've often wanted to meet you; considering our mutual interests, it's strange we haven't done so before."

Campbell set aside his cane. "Yes, it is, he agreed. "I might return the compliment, Rankin; you're to be complimented on your splendid reputation. It's a privilege to know you."

"I had expected to hear from you before this," the detective continued.

"It's been in all the papers that we wanted to communicate with you."

"That's what really brought me in," Campbell returned easily. "I happened to be called hastily to the country, where there were no newspapers. I spent the night on the Perkiomen Creek, at the cottage of my friend, Nick Alberti, who manages the Organdy Club."

Rankin spoke casually. "That's where so much of the trouble began, wasn't it, Campbell? When you and Mrs. Adele Rowland spent a night there, two weeks ago?"

At the deliberate provocation, the racketeer compressed his lips resentfully and his eyes flashed; but with an effort he held his peace.

"What about the phone call in the lawyer's office?" Rankin challenged. "You were heard to cry out, 'Oh, my God! and 'ou Fool!'" That didn't mean very pleasant news. You were alarmed enough to rush out quickly to . . . well, be on hand yourself and then leave the city."

Again Campbell's features hardened. "You haven't a single fact to prove any connection with Mrs. Keith. It's no use, Rankin; you can't show I had any knowledge of her death before today, or expect me to admit anything you can use."

"At least you have no objection to telling me who phoned you," Rankin suggested.

"Oh, but I certainly have. That's my private affair."

Abruptly the detective shifted his attack. "If I'm not mistaken you reached Mrs. Dawson's office yesterday before Mrs. Keith arrived with her escort."

"No, I wasn't there then," Campbell corrected him. "I followed them by a few minutes—it must have been almost twenty to three; and they had already gone into the library to wait."

"Mrs. Keith chose to stay in the inner office, fifteen or five where she could be alone," Rankin started, "and you were aware of that; in fact, Mrs. Rowland joined you from the library to tell you that." His tone became hostile. "Just before she entered fifteen-o-five herself, to unlock the hall door."

The implied accusation brought Campbell forward in his chair, in a swift burst of anger.

"So that's what you are getting at," he said, through his teeth. "You will claim next I committed the murder myself! Damn it, Rankin, be careful with your charges; you might have an unpleasant job of trying to prove them. I was in the main office during the time she was killed."

"So you knew when that happened?" the detective observed dryly.

"And why not?" his visitor demanded wrathfully. "It's in all the papers that she died between half-two and three o'clock."

"Well, what about the time before you arrived—two-thirty-eight—or after you left, that was at two-fifty-six; you still had four minutes leeway. And the whole business could be accomplished in hardly more than a minute. Mrs. Rowland had unlocked the door from the corridor and pulled the curtains; it was only necessary to enter fifteen-o-five, close the windows, chloroform Mrs. Keith and then open them again."

Excited, Campbell appeared ready to burst out a refutation, but caught himself, in a desperate attempt to regain his equanimity.

"Well, what of that?" He spoke more calmly. "It's all words, Rankin, nothing more; you've no foundation or confirmation of any of these suppositions. It's ridiculous for me to take them at all seriously."

"Campbell," he demanded slowly, "where can I find Mitch Riley? I think he could help me and I would like to have a short conversation with him."

At last he had penetrated Campbell's vigilant guard. Startled and furious, a cold rage leaped to his eyes, in which the detective recognized amazement, shock and, what was most significant, fear.

He could not keep a strained timor from his voice. "Mitch Riley? Oh, yes, he is one of Nick's friends from New York, isn't he, Rankin?"

"Yes, of Alberti's, Dutch Sykes and plenty others I needn't mention. Yesterday afternoon, he was in the office where Mrs. Keith died; he considerably left his fingerprints on the table beside her. And when I learn . . . he was there, they are going to hang somebody, Campbell!"

Campbell regained his composure. "No, I don't understand his presence, if he was really there. You'll have to scout around to his friends to account for it, Rankin. All I know is that I haven't laid eyes on him."
