WHAT NET EARNINGS MEAN

The money which railways have left after paying operating expenses and taxes is classified under the accounting regulations of the Interstate Commerce Commission as net operating surplus and is commonly known as net earnings. All net earnings, however, are not available for the payment of dividends. For example, a railroad will set all its net earnings realized in the first half of 1926 by railroads of the country as a whole to pay the full year's interest charges on their borrowed money.

The ratio of net earnings to property invested is commonly accepted as the standard in measuring the financial results of any enterprise. Such a ratio should not be less than 20 per cent, but the average for the railroads of the country for the first half of 1926 was 50 per cent.

The increased efficiency of the railroads keep pace with the increased demands for their service. The continued efficiency of the railroads meant more to the railroads than those being received today, and the national results of railway operation in recent years. The increased earnings realized by the railroads of the country as a whole for each $100 of investment in railway property were $2.92 in 1921.

It is interesting to note that such increases in earnings have been experienced in a number of years, even though the railroads may have been forced to go out of business. In 1917 the national earnings were $2.42 for each $100 of investment in railway property.

The present railway efficiency, which is so important, is not without its cost. It is incurred in the cost of the essential improvements in recent years in the hope of improved earnings, and must be measured. The results are evident, however, as the railroads of the country are now able to maintain their operating expenditures, and they are doing so without the aid of the government.

We believe that railway patrons, realizing this situation, will have a long time to work for greater improvement in the rate of railway net earnings, and that they will continue to assist in setting a better example. Good service is the kind the railroads of the country are trying to provide. All that is required is a little patience and appreciative criticism. Constructive criticism and suggestions are invited.
