FULTON, KENTUCKY, FRIDAY, OCTOBER 4, 1935

NUMBER THIRTY-SEVEN

FULTON CHURCHES TO HOLD LOYALTY DAY

Sunday is Loyalty Day in Fulton and in all Protestant, Jewish and Catholic churches in the United States. To observe this day special services, with some fine messages to be delivered at both morning and evening services. Below are some comments by local pastors, which set out fully the reason for Loyalty Day.

In connection with the nationwide Church Loyalty Day, which is being inaugurated Sunday, Oct. 6, the First Baptist church will place special emphasis upon all of its services on next Sunday. This Loyalty Day was inaugurated because of a conviction that spiritual recovery must precede lasting national and economic recovery. The emphasis aims not only to have a large attendance in all churches in America next Sunday, but it aims to encourage regular church attendance through the entire year. Too many church members in our nation have been taking an extended and extensive spiritual vacation, and it is hoped that Loyalty Day will assist in calling them back to their places of service.

All the churches in Fulton will give special attention to this day. At the First Baptist church, the pastor will use as his subject for the morning message, "Loyalty to Christ." In the weekly Teachers and Officers meeting Wednesday night, Loyalty Day was brought to the attention of these Fulton school leaders and they will endeavor to make it a real Loyalty Day in the Sunday school.

Every Christian in Fulton should be in his church next Sunday morning. Those who are not Christians should appreciate the influence and work of Christianity enough to be there also. If every church in Fulton was full next Sunday, there would be two thousand and fifty six people who could not find a seat in any church. Let us all go to church next Sunday—and every Sunday on through the year.

Rev. Woodrow Fuller, Pastor

LOYALTY DAY AT M. E. CHURCH
Next Sunday is to be Loyalty Day in the Sunday School at the First Methodist church. That is the beginning of the first printing of the Bible, the exact date of which was Oct. 4, 1535. The churches of the nation will be individually and unitedly celebrating this memorable event for the next two months, ending with Universal Bible Sunday, Dec. 2.

Two objects at least should be the circulation and reading of the Bible; and second some practical emphasis. First, the importance of plan in every community to seek out those families and individuals who do not have Bibles and see that they are supplied.

Loyalty is one of the most beautiful attributes that man possesses. So much depends upon it. The happiness of the child hinges on his loyalty to his parents and to his playmates. The degree of his loyalty will determine his success in marriage, in business and in the church.

MATTHEWS TO MEET FREEMAN OCT. 10

Bobby Matthews, the Fulton middleweight, is scheduled to meet Tommy Freeman at Jackson, Tenn. next Thursday night, October 10. Freeman recently challenged the winner of the Matthews-Williams battle, which was won by the Fulton fighter.

Matthews faces a worthy opponent in this fight, as Freeman is a topnotcher, having formerly held the welterweight championship. Freeman has fought such formidable foes as Dundee, Gorilla Jones, Young Jack Thompson, Jack King, and has a long string of knockouts to his credit.

Matthews has had a very successful career, having defeated most of his opponents easily, while at the same time he has never been floored for the count. The battle between Matthews and Freeman is a "natural," and should prove to be the outstanding match of the year for this section.

This fight means more to Matthews than it does to Freeman, who is a veteran in the game. The Fulton boy is staging a comeback after an operation a few months ago, and if he can win over Freeman will have gained a decisive step up the ladder to ring success.

Mr. Hill, who sustained a deep wound in the neck, lacerations of the arms, hand and knee, was rushed to the Illinois Central hospital in Paducah, where he has been watched over with rave concern.

The injured were Wayne White, driver, and Misses Mae Moore and Nell Boulton, all of Union City, who were taken to the Fulton hospital for treatment. White, who was driving a Ford, alleged he was blinded by the lights of the parked car and pulled over too far.

Paul Farlow, agricultural extension agent for the Illinois Central System and W. P. Burnett talked before the Rotary Club this week on dairying, as a part of the program in charge of Joe Browder. Attention was called to the National Dairy Show in St. Louis this month and farmers of this community were urged to attend. Reduced rates are being offered by the Illinois Central for those attending this dairy show. Mr. Burnett said Fulton county is not yet ready for the testing program conducted by the Purchase Dairy Herd Association, and pointed out that distribution of better sires was a step forward for that test.

Browder's Mill has this week installed a new wheat cleaning machine which enables them to clean wheat much better than ever before. They have installed this new machine in their Tennessee warehouse which is located on Paschall st near the railroad.

Construction of a new service station is now underway on Fourth Street Extension opposite the Le-manage, and other officials have been going over plans with Morris & Sams, local agents, for several weeks. A modern station will be erected.

Compliments usually make people feel good and think well of the speaker, be he truthful or not.

BULLDOGS LOST 12-0; IN PADUCAH TONITE

The Fulton High School Bulldogs journeyed to Union City last Friday night, where they met the Tornadoes in a fast and hard fought game, losing by a score of 12 to 0.

Austin kicked off for Union City in the first quarter. Fulton received the ball and advanced up the field about 30 yards to lose the ball on downs. Then Union City marched down the field for the first touchdown made by Griffith, halfback and captain.

In the second period Fulton's Bulldogs made two stands on their own goal line, holding Union City for four downs. Fulton received the ball to kick upfield, but Union City blocked the kick and pushed ball over for another touchdown.

In the second half Union City kicked off again. Edwards got off with several nice runs, advancing the ball to Union City's one yard line, when the Tornadoes held like a stone wall.

In the last frame Fulton had the ball most of the time. The Bulldogs launched an aerial attack, completing two passes, Edwards to Beadles, Edwards to Boyd, but failed to score.

OUR ROVING REPORTER REPORTS

There has been a great deal of discussion about who would be the next man to meet Joe Louis, the negro heavyweight who defeated Maxie Baer. To match the toughness and dynamite packed in both fists by Joe Louis, a man about town has suggested that Popeye the Sailor be signed up to meet the big negro. It might be added that a big helping of "spinach" be given Popeye just before the bout.

Big Jim Weaver, who pitched for the Pittsburgh Pirates this year, was in town last week, visiting home folks. Jim was pleased to get back in this neck of the woods, and meet old friends while here. Incidentally, many budding baseball stars, now in school here, got a big kick out of seeing Fulton's ace baseball player in person, who gives them something to talk about and to spur on their ambitions.

Bobby Matthews, another one of Fulton's outstanding athletes, has been meeting with his usual success since his return to the ring. In his recent fights he has won two by knockouts. Those who claim to know something about the fighting business, believe Matthews needs to hook-up with some good trainer and manager in the East in order to go places. Matthews has proven his ability but what he needs now is polishing up and aggressive management to put him in the money.

"Miss Western Kentucky" will also be chosen Saturday night on the stage at the exposition hall.

YOUNG DEMOCRATS WILL FORM CLUB

The initial meeting for the purpose of forming a Young Democratic Club in Fulton County was held Wednesday night at the Bob White Motor Company with much interest being taken in the prospects for a live and active organization in this county. Bob White was elected temporary president, and J. R. Graham as temporary secretary-treasurer. Hendon Wright was chosen as a delegate to the state convention to be held at Seelbach Hotel in Louisville this Saturday.

A meeting will be held at the City Hall in Fulton next Tuesday night at 7:30 o'clock to organize a county-wide Young Democratic Club. Membership is open to anyone between the ages of 16 and 40 with honorary membership for those above forty who wish to assist in the cause of the Democratic party. Membership fee is only 25c and everyone is urged to join and help in the coming campaign in November.

At the meeting Tuesday night several speakers will address the body, including E. J. Stahr, county Democratic chairman, of Hickman, and Steve Wiley, city attorney of Fulton. The purpose of the Young Democratic Club is to stimulate in the young people of Kentucky an active interest in governmental affairs, to increase the efficiency of popular government, to foster and perpetuate the ideals and principles of the Democratic party, and to provide for our people through its administration the highest degree of justice and social welfare.

Mussolini's Demands Ruin Plans for Peace

ETHIOPIA accepted as a basis for discussion the plan submitted by the League of Nations committee of five nations, of which Salvador de Madariaga of Spain was chairman, but Italy rejected it utterly. Then Premier Mussolini offered, in the form of "observations," his counterdemands. The committee considered these quite out of the question and prepared to draw up a report to the league council announcing that its efforts had proved futile.

Thus Italy was left in the position of having rejected all peace proposals and Ethiopia had made its case stronger by having accepted as a negotiatory instrument a plan that called on her to make drastic concessions. The issue was in this way put up to the council, whose duty was next to proceed under article 15 of the covenant, leading to sanctions against Italy unless Mussolini yields.

The Italian demands were considered most extravagant. One was for a sort of mandate over all of Ethiopia except the relatively small area inhabited by the Amharic people, who constitute the ruling class. Another was that Italy be ceded land to connect Eritrea and Italian Somaliland, now separated by French and British Somaliland. A third was for demobilization and disarmament of a considerable portion of the Ethiopian army, the remainder to be put under Italian commanders.

In the diplomatic jockeying that followed the communication of these terms by Aloisi to Madariaga, the Italian baron said the proposals were unofficial, and this left the way open for further discussion. It was reported that the French and Italian delegates to the league had persuaded the British representatives that the three nations should hold another Stresa conference to insure European peace.

Great Britain informed Italy that her tremendous naval concentration in the Mediterranean was not ordered with any aggressive motive but because of the violent anti-English campaign carried on by the fascist press of Italy. The massing of the British warships at Gibraltar, Malta, Alexandria and the Suez canal continued, and Italy responded by rearranging her naval dispositions. Also the flow of Italian troops to East Africa was continuous, and it was announced in Rome that 200,000 soldiers of the classes of 1911, 1912, 1913 and 1914 had reported for duty. This brought to 1,000,000 the total Italian mobilization, which Mussolini some time ago promised would be the mark reached before October 1.

Officials in Rome declared that Italy was determined to press a military campaign in Ethiopia, feeling that only by such a campaign—in which modern weapons would be called into play—could Ethiopia be eliminated as a "danger." They explained that Italy would do everything in its power to avoid a clash with Britain, and if possible, would localize its conflict with Ethiopia in east Africa.

Secretary Hull Sets Up Arms Control Office

PREPARING for the imminent probability of war between Italy and Ethiopia, Secretary of State Cordell Hull established an office of arms and munitions control to carry out the provisions of the neutrality act and direct federal control of the munitions traffic.

The office is under the direction of R. Walton Moore, assistant secretary of state. Joseph C. Green is chief of the office and has as his assistant Charles W. Yost.

Strong, Swift Army Urged by General MacArthur

GEN. DOUGLAS MACARTHUR, retiring chief of staff, in his final report recommended a five-year plan for making the American army into an instrument of speed, fighting ability and destructive power unsurpassed elsewhere. Quality rather than quantity, he said, was needed, and he proposed that all implements of war be modernized and that the technical training of the officers be intensified. He said:

"Beyond all doubt, any major war of the future will see every belligerent nation highly organized for the single purpose of victory, the attainment of which will require integration and intensification of individual and collective effort."

"But it will be a nation at war rather than a nation in arms. Of this vast machine the fighting forces will be only the cutting edge; their mandatory characteristics will be speed in movement, power in fire and shock action, and the utmost in professional skill and leadership."

"Their armaments will necessarily be of the most efficient types obtainable and the transportation, supply and maintenance systems supporting them will be required to function perfectly and continuously. Economic and industrial resources will have to insure the adequacy of munitions supply and the sustenance of the whole civil population. In these latter fields the great proportion of the employable population will find its war duty."

French Croix De Feu Men in Big Mobilization

FRENCH Nationalists, whose organization is known as Croix de Feu, are preparing to take over control of the government—at some future time not yet determined. Just to show their strength, they were directed by their leader, Col. Francois de la Roquette, to "mobilize" the other night secretly in forests and fields throughout France, and it was claimed that 250,000 members gathered. Communists and Socialists attacked the "Cross of Fire" at Caen and other places and several men were injured. De la Roquette's followers, however, refrained from violence. To one of the meetings he addressed, the would-be dictator said: "We won't fight back until the time comes for mass mobilization; then we will fight as a single unit."

Remembering what Mussolini and his Fascists did in Italy, these Croix de Feu men may have to be reckoned with later in France.

Manuel Quezon Is Elected Philippines President

WHEN the new Philippines commonwealth is formally born on November 15 in Manila, with Vice President John M. Garner officiating as its godfather, Manuel Quezon, for 20 years the leader of the fight for independence, will be inaugurated as its first president. In the recent election he and his entire ticket were victorious. The defeated rivals for the presidency were Emilio Aguinaldo, who led the rebellion against American rule years ago, and Bishop Gregorio Aglipay. They were virtually snowed under.

Sergio Osmeña was elected vice president, and victory of Manuel Roxas, Quintin Paredes and Camilo Osias assured the new president ample leadership in the unicameral national assembly, where he also will have a clear voting majority.

Quezon's term of office is six years and his annual salary will be $15,000. Aguinaldo charged fraud in the election and sent a protest to President Roosevelt. But all he obtained from that quarter was an indirect snub, for the President immediately sent to Quezon the following message:

"My most official congratulations upon your election to the highest office within the gift of the Filipino people. Your overwhelming choice by the electorate is a fitting culmination of your many years of patriotic labor in behalf of the country."

President Gets Ready for Western Trip

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT returned to the White House from his three weeks' vacation in Hyde Park and started in on a busy week of official duties and preparation for his trip to San Diego, Calif. Among the first things he did was the delivery of a radio address in behalf of the Annual Mobilization for Human Needs. In this he explained his position on taxing corporation gifts to charity. He also took up the matter of speeding up the expenditure of the huge work relief fund and discussed with advisers the problem of the soft coal miners' strike. Mr. Roosevelt will not make many speeches on his western jaunt.

By executive order the President added $800,000,000 to the sum which Harry Hopkins has to spend as FWA administrator, making the total at his command $1,375,000,000.

Flight to Lithuania Ends on an Irish Field

LEUT. FELIX WAITKUS, young Lithuanian and Wisconsin aviator, made a gallant effort to fly solo and nonstop from New York to Kamnas, Lithuania, and failed, though he did get safely across the Atlantic ocean. Lost in fog and tired out, he made a forced landing on a rough field near Ballinrobe, Ireland. The machine was badly damaged but Waitkus was uninjured.

Check on Spending

Washington.—When President Roosevelt entered the White House March 4, 1933, every dollar of federal money that was expended was accounted for and the vouchers reviewed by the general accounting office. J. Raymond McCarl, comptroller general of the United States, occupied and still occupies an independent position in the accounts he directed and the reviews that were made under the budget and accounting law. But with the arrival of the New Deal and the crisis in government and the nation arising from the depression, scores of new laws were enacted, new agencies of government were created and billions of dollars were appropriated, the bulk of it being spent without reference to the accounting act or the bureau of the budget. Congress, under White House direction, did not make these new agencies or their spending accountable to the comptroller general.

It was almost two years before President Roosevelt saw fit to make any of the emergency agencies, the alphabetical soup, amenable to the general accounting office. Consequently, millions upon millions of dollars were spent and only the spending agencies knew whether they were spent in accordance with law. Now, however, things have changed. Late last winter, the President began extending the broad wings of the general accounting office over emergency agencies and has continued to do so until, only the other day, the last of these were made responsible to the comptroller general. Thus an independent governmental unit—one with no axes to grind—again is in a position to say whether federal money is being spent as congress directed and in a manner which the taxpayers have the right to demand.

This spending of money in gigantic amounts always breeds suspicion. It causes people to inquire, whatever the form of government may be or whatever political party may be in control, whether there is waste or graft, whether the then office holders are feathering their own nests, and many another question of the like. It was true in the case of the New Deal. Observers here in Washington constantly were receiving information alleging that this individual or that had been displaying signs of unusual prosperity; that rumors were afloat concerning graft and crookedness in one agency or another and that "somebody ought to expose" the goings-on with respect to a named department of government. It was not an unusual circumstance because in every administration we have in Washington who attempt to see and to hear as much as we can, get the same kind of reaction. Only, it seemed to have been worse this time and well it may have been because the amount of money made available to President Roosevelt and his subordinates was so much larger. It is my belief, however, that there has not been more of this intangible thing called graft in government in the present administration, than in most others. There have been some crookednesses of some officials but I expect when and if the future lays bare all facts concerning the present administration and its handling of the vast sums of money available to it, it will be disclosed that most of the New Deal officials have been honest in their disbursement of funds. Their friends may have profited but, if they have, that is just a repetition of an old story, a circumstance always developing in a government managed under the two party system. To the victors always go the spoils.

Break for Taxpayers

The importance of the Ickes-Hopkins row to the reader of this column, however, lies largely in the fact that the particular reader is a taxpayer. The contention is simply this: The last congress appropriated $4,880,000,000 for use by the administration in public works and relief. If all of that sum were spent the public debt would be increased by that amount because internal revenue taxes are insufficient to offset more than the ordinary government expenditures. Therefore, if all of this money is not spent, and it cannot be spent if the Ickes-Hopkins dispute continues to hold back administration plans, then the taxpayers will have just that much less of a government debt to meet through this payment of their taxes.

So the President's order placing all administrative agencies under the general accounting office to see that their spending is honestly done and the developments within the administration over a difference in policy must be taken together as a break for the taxpayer.

Potato Control

Agriculture adjustment administration officials are about ready to present to the farmers of this country a detailed plan for control of potato production. It will provide means for boosting the incomes of the potato farmers something more than 100 per cent, and will increase the cost of this item of food to consumers by a proportionate amount, of course. Conferences soon will be held between the AAA and representatives of farmers' organizations to work out phases of the plan requiring farmer approval.

Various thoughts arise if one reflects upon potato control. First, control of potato production marks the fourteenth agricultural crop brought under regimentation and it presents, probably, the toughest of all of them in the matter of enforcing its provisions.

Adoption of the potato control program represents attainment of a point in the life of the AAA where one step has led to another until control of potatoes was essential, or the whole plan of crop control flops. It will be recalled that the declared purpose of the AAA at the beginning was only for the control of cotton. Land withheld from cotton then was planted to tobacco and tobacco had to be controlled; and the land withdrawn, farmers in some sections turned to peanuts and peanuts had to be controlled.

I understand the AAA is considerably worried about the job of enforcing the potato control law. That law provides compulsion against overproduction in the form of a tax club—a tax of 45 cents a bushel. In addition, there are penalties of an amazingly severe kind—$1,000 fine for the first offense and imprisonment for not more than a year for the second.

Criticize Spending

Every one knows that when an individual's pocketbook is touched, he rises in revolt. By the time the next election comes around individuals will have had their pocketbooks touched rather forcibly by national and state and local taxes of an increased amount. Thus, it is easy to see how the criticism of Roosevelt's spending is growing and can continue to grow. The government has been pushed ten or ten or twelve billion more in debt and the end is not in sight, despite the fact that Mr. Roosevelt has intimated on several occasions lately that he proposes to curtail federal expenditures except for emergency purposes. Those announcements and any future declarations he may make are not going to soften the antagonistic feeling that people have for any public official who wastes money whether the motives be proper or improper. From this point, one may look into the crystal of the 1936 campaign and it takes no stretch of the imagination to visualize what a pounding the New Deal opposition will give the Roosevelt administration on this question of spending.

When Mr. Roosevelt began spending, he declared it was justified because hundreds of thousands of citizens were starving. His next pronouncement on this subject by way of explaining continued expenditure was that if the government spent freely, it would serve as a priming of the economic pump; that the circulation of federal money would allow industry to sell and that industry would replace by manufacture the things sold. That, too, brought little or no result. Then we entered the current stage where the spending was to be closely supervised and only projects that held promise of actually developing manufacture and retail selling would be approved and financed by federal money. It is regrettable but it is a fact that almost nothing has come of this program.

And to make matters worse, lately, Secretary Ickes, public works administrator, and Relief Administrator Harry Hopkins have locked horns on the bulk of the projects on which federal money was to be used. It is not strange that these two men should differ. Mr. Hopkins, being a trained, professional, welfare worker, sees things only from the standpoint of the individual who needs food. Mr. Ickes has a conception of federal spending that embraces the use of money in ways designed to start the great industries in motion. He figures that if these industries get going, they will employ workers; the workers will spend their wages and the retailers will profit thereby and, as the retailers sell from their shelves, they seek replacements from the manufacturers. The controversy between Mr. Hopkins and Mr. Ickes, therefore, is not one to be settled by compromise or by soft words. In fact, it may never be settled until one or the other gets out of his place in the government.

Break for Taxpayers

The importance of the Ickes-Hopkins row to the reader of this column, however, lies largely in the fact that the particular reader is a taxpayer. The contention is simply this: The last congress appropriated $4,880,000,000 for use by the administration in public works and relief. If all of that sum were spent the public debt would be increased by that amount because internal revenue taxes are insufficient to offset more than the ordinary government expenditures. Therefore, if all of this money is not spent, and it cannot be spent if the Ickes-Hopkins dispute continues to hold back administration plans, then the taxpayers will have just that much less of a government debt to meet through this payment of their taxes.

So the President's order placing all administrative agencies under the general accounting office to see that their spending is honestly done and the developments within the administration over a difference in policy must be taken together as a break for the taxpayer.

Potato Control

Agriculture adjustment administration officials are about ready to present to the farmers of this country a detailed plan for control of potato production. It will provide means for boosting the incomes of the potato farmers something more than 100 per cent, and will increase the cost of this item of food to consumers by a proportionate amount, of course. Conferences soon will be held between the AAA and representatives of farmers' organizations to work out phases of the plan requiring farmer approval.

Various thoughts arise if one reflects upon potato control. First, control of potato production marks the fourteenth agricultural crop brought under regimentation and it presents, probably, the toughest of all of them in the matter of enforcing its provisions.

Ethiopian War Fever
Not Even a Nest Egg

One hundred and thirty-nine years ago George Washington made his farewell address. It is said "Victorian" to drag in George Washington now, when so many are prepared to write a better Constitution than the one he signed. Nevertheless, some of the old-fashioned may tolerate a reminder that in his farewell address George Washington said:

"It is our true policy to steer clear of permanent alliances with any portion of the foreign world."

Also, with apologies to pacifists and high-spirited young college gentlemen who say they would not fight under any circumstances, you are reminded that George Washington said in 1790:

"To be prepared for war is one of the most effectual means of preserving peace."

If Mussolini can be scared by British gestures, he will be scared, with England sending her great battleships to the Gibraltar harbor. Other battleships and thousands of soldiers are sent to her island of Malta, and, imitating real war, she is putting "submarine boats" in the Gibraltar harbor on the assumption that wicked Mussolini might send submarines to blow up her battleships; and that is exactly what he would do if it came to war.

Mussolini is not alone in his desire for war. On Sunday in the Ethiopian capital, Addis Ababa, according to the Associated Press, "2,000 shrieking Ethiopians," yelling "We want war," gathered before the imperial palace demanding weapons. The Associated Press says: "The scene was so violent that police confiscated motion picture films of it." That was wise, because films might have convinced the outside world that Ethiopians and Italians are much alike "under the skin."

Sewell L. Avery, head of Montgomery Ward & Co., will tell you that the work of the tax gatherers in America is done thoroughly. His company, on its regular business in six months, made $4,349,764. Taxes on this business amounted to $1,000,000 or $251,000 more than the concern earned. You might almost call that "discouraging business." When you take the eggs from the nest of the hen that would like to set, you always leave one egg, or at least a door knob, to go on with.

Dispatches from Tokyo tell of planning political murder wholesale.

The "god-sent troops" that have committed occasional murders in highest places are tired of "occasional" murders, and decided to wipe out the Japanese cabinet in an air raid with bombs, destroy the financial district of Tokyo, assassinate hundreds of industrial and financial leaders and "re-establish imperial despotism."

The burning of buildings to put the throne and Tokyo in a state of chaos was part of the plan.

Sir Malcolm Campbell, who took his giant English-built automobile to the smooth surface of the Great Salt Desert, west of Salt Lake City, and drove the car faster than 300 miles an hour, returns to New York advising motorists to "drive carefully."

Sir Malcolm, who has surpassed every speed record on the surface of the earth, selects the right place for speeding. At home he belongs to English organizations established to promote safety.

Sir James Jeans, British astronomer and physicist, whose "The Mysterious Universe" and other books you should read, has changed his mind about the age of the universe, and, like Professor Einstein, when he changes his mind he tells you.

He thinks the universe is about 10,000,000,000,000 or ten trillions of years old. That is a long time to Sir James Jeans and us, but, for all Jeans or anybody else knows, it may mean less than one hour in the life of some "super-universe."

Hitler, talking to his army about "iron discipline," blames "Christianity and the Hohenzollerns for the rise of Communism that 'I crushed when I came to power.' Whether he crushed it or not remains to be seen.

A sailor from an American ship is locked up in Germany for humming "The Internationale," Communist hymn, and making the hymn worse by saying something unpleasant about Hitler.

Palmetto, Ga., reports negro tenant farmers selling their salt pork and eating chicken instead, because prices for pork are higher than for chickens. The drought, lack of feed and the professor who invented the idea of killing mamma pigs before the little pigs were born are highly appreciated by Georgia's "hog raisers."

DISTRESS MONEY

During the war and after the collapse of the Austrian monarchy, when coins disappeared and were largely hoarded, many different kinds of paper notes, so-called "distress money," were issued by various towns, villages, and provinces. In addition to primitive slips of paper, pieces of wood, parchment, leather, lacquer, and even porcelain were used as money. All these are on show at a remarkable exhibition at the Bogenbund gallery at Vienna. The exhibition shows that not only societies, but also innkeepers, newspapers, and political parties issued money tokens.

SYNOPSIS

To the little town of Heron River comes a "Silver" Grenoble, daughter of "Gentleman Jim," formerly of the community, known as a gambler, news of whose murder in Chicago has reached the town. Sophronia Willard, Jim Grenoble's sister, is at the depot to meet Silver. Her household consists of her husband, and stepsons, Rodrick and Jason. The Willards own only half of the farm, the other half being Anna Grenoble's. On Silver's arrival Duke Melbank, shiftless youth, makes himself obnoxious. Rodrick is on the eve of marriage to Corinne Meador. Silver declares her eagerness to live on the farm, and will not sell her portion. She meets Roddy, Silver tells Sophronia ("Phronie," by request) something—but by no means all—of her relations with Gerald Lucas, gambler friend of her father. Roddy marries Corinne. She has a maid, Paula, who seems to attract Jason. Silver again meets Gerald Lucas, who has established a gambling resort. She is compelled to introduce him to Corinne Willard much against her will. Silver confides to Roddy the fact of her illicit relations with Lucas. Friendship between Lucas and Corinne develops. At a dance Duke Melbank insults Silver. Roddy's solicitude brings Silver to the realization that she loves him. Roddy is offered a position at the University farm, but, to Corinne's dismay, he declines it.

In the end, Roddy found himself battling alone against all three members of his family. Silver had taken no part in the discussion. As she listened, however, a conviction grew with her. Roddy Willard must accept the position that had been offered him. There was, as he had said, always another year for the farmer, but that had nothing to do with the problem. She knew—as the others knew, indeed—what was in his heart when he had said that. But she knew what none of them knew. Had she not heard Paula Melbanker talk that afternoon in the post office? Had she not seen enough herself?

At last Jason got up and left. Sophronia banked the fire, and old Rodrick went off to bed.

"Well, I'll see you all tomorrow," Roddy said heavily and started for the door.

"Wait a minute, Roddy," Silver called out.

He turned and looked at her curiously.

"What's on your mind?" Roddy asked Silver, as soon as Sophronia had gone.

Silver laughed up at him with disarming naivete as she stood before him.

"I thought I'd just wait until everybody else got through talking," she said. Her glance fell for an instant from his. Then, summoning all her fortitude, she spoke. "You've got to take this position, Roddy. You are a fool to stay on here—starvation staring you in the face—with a respectable living offered you."

"My dear child," Roddy exclaimed. "You took almost motherly just now. You want me to take the job—for my own good, eh?"

"That's part of it," she admitted lightly. "But—I agree with Phronie. Corinne hates the farm."

"Corinne will be all right when she gets to understand it a little better."

Suddenly, Silver's body stiffened. "There's something more, too," she said, her chin rising coolly, indifferently. "When your lease is up next summer, I'm going to sell my section."

She saw him blink for a moment as though he had not heard aright. Then he took a step toward her. "I don't believe you," he said. "What has changed your mind about this place all of a sudden? There's something else back of this."

"There isn't," she burst out passionately. "For God's sake, get out before—before you're ruined!"

Her words seemed to be scurrying over each other now, she thought in panic. But he should not try to wring the truth from her—he should not!

Roddy's voice came in a hoarse whisper from his clenched teeth. "You too! My G-d, I thought you had more fight in you than that!" He turned away from her and moved toward the door, then looked back quickly. "All right—go ahead! I might have known what to expect when I began dealing with a woman. Well—sell it tomorrow if you want to. But I'm going to stay until I'm kicked out."

"You are being a fool!" she told him, starting to keep back the hot tears. "What will that bring you?"

"It won't bring me the kind of treachery you've handed me, by G-d!" he barked, and plunged out into the darkness, slamming the door behind him.

CHAPTER VIII

On Thanksgiving day the first snow fell in Heron River. Jason and Paula and Steve had come down to the early afternoon. After the feast, Silver dressed warmly and set out alone for a walk across the fields to the Platte place.

The brooding melancholy of the day filled her with a sweet, aching nostalgia, a yearning too profound to name. To run away from Roddy Willard would mean that she would run away from these fields—from her very birthright. And there would never be any real escape in such a flight, as there had been in her flight from Gerald Lucas. Gerald had not been real, any way; the hard ground beneath her foot seemed to tell her that now.

She had been too selfishly absorbed during the past few days to give any thought to what Sophronia might feel about her going away. Poor old Phronie—how little she knew of what was going on about her. The more she thought of it, the more convinced Silver became that Roddy Willard would remain on this land until he was forced to leave it. Her threat to sell the land had done nothing except to make him more stubborn in his determination to remain. She was made desolate by the knowledge that he was as passionately devoted to this land as she was herself.

She thought vehemently, tears dimming her eyes now, not for any unhappy, outrageous love of Roddy Willard would she give up her life here! The Platte children greeted her with their usual uproarious good humor. "These Norwegian youngsters lived in a merry cosmos of their own where even poverty was something to laugh at. Six of them there were, ranging from seven years of age to nineteen, with enough boisterous enthusiasm to turn the little farmhouse into a babel. Silver played the decrepit little organ, and sang with the children until the gathering darkness warned her that it was time to leave.

On the way home, she came upon Jason and Paula beside a thicket of hazelbushes. Paula looked at Silver without surprise or embarrassment, and Jason's dark eyes smiled at her.

The three began their walk home together. When they came before the big house, Jason paused. "Come along in, Silver," he invited. "I have something to show you. I wouldn't have the nerve to ask you—but we have the house all to ourselves. I've been making a picture of Paula," he confessed. "And I thought maybe you'd like to look at it."

"It's much prettier than me," Paula said modestly.

"Oh—why, Jase—I'd love to see it!" Silver replied eagerly, going toward the door.

They entered the house and Jason led the way to the attic and lighted the lamp. In the "studio," on a birchwood easel reclined a florid but far from unrecognizable portrait of Paula Gobel. The powerful and intimidating Valkyrie limned there might easily have been a Teutonic ancestress of Paula's.

For some time Silver had suspected that there was more between Jason and Paula than they were willing to reveal to their little world. Whatever ultimate expression it achieved met not at all. It was there and they shared it.

"Jason—I'm amazed!" she burst forth at last. "Why—it's really—really great!"

"Gosh!" Jason sighed with relief. "I was scared to show it to you. I thought maybe I'd worked it over too much. But do you think it's good enough to give to Phronie for a Christmas present? That was my idea. She likes pictures, you know."

"She'll love it, Jase!" Silver assured him. "I know she will. But why don't you ask me to sit for you some time?"

Jason smiled a bit sheepishly. "I'm not so good as all that. You've got—I don't know what it is." He stammered.

The Brooding Melancholy of the Day Filled Her With a Sweet, Aching Nostalgia.

apologetically. "Well—you're not as pretty as Corinne, for instance. But there's something about your face—I don't know—but it would take a real artist to catch it. I'd like to give you one of my new pictures, though, if you want one."

"I'd love to have one, Jase," she said slowly. "I'd be very proud of it."

Jason went self-consciously to a shelf and drew down a portfolio of drawings. "Nobody but Paula has ever seen these," he said.

The drawings were pasted scenes with a simplicity of line and tone that surprised Silver. "Why, Jase, they are lovely!" she exclaimed. She turned to him impulsively. "Would you rather do this than farm?"

He laughed and shook his head, then looked at Paula. "I guess not," he said quietly. "I'm a farmer. But it's because I like farming that I get a kick out of doing this once in a while. Which one do you want, Silver?"

After a moment's thought, Silver selected a light autumn sketch in grays and browns.

"Has Roddy never seen this?" she asked. "No—he hasn't seen any of them. I used to show him some of my things—and he liked them. But after he met Corinne—well, it's none of my business. I never could quite figure it out, myself. D—n it—I feel sorry for Roddy!"

Silver tucked the drawing under her arm. "I'll hang this one in my room," she said, then started toward the door. "And don't worry about Roddy. When a man falls in love, it does funny things to him sometimes."

Jason laughed. "Gosh, doesn't it?" he exclaimed, and looked at Paula. "Shall I tell Silver?" he asked suddenly.

"Sure!" Paula said at once. "Jason looked at Silver and smiled. "Paula and I are going to be married in the summer," Jason confessed. "—maybe in the spring. We're thinking of a little dairy farm up north—maybe we're not sure yet."

Silver exclaimed with delight. "Am I the first to hear about it?"

"We didn't know ourselves—not until this afternoon," Jason grinned. "Tears came into Silver's eyes as she looked at them. Jason and Paula—beginning life together on a dairy farm—"

"Don't say anything," Jason said, putting his arm about Paula. "But don't tell the others just yet."

"Well, I suppose I ought to wish you luck," Silver said, "but when two people are in love, there's nothing much anyone can say. Isn't that so, Paula?"

"It sure is so," Paula agreed lapsing into an accent she had almost conquered since her advent from the Rhineland ten years ago.

The days passed, and Silver Grenoble came presently to know what it meant to live on a farm in winter. But the weekly round of hard work fell into a rhythm which somehow eased the discomfort, and in the old stone house there was always an overtone of contentment.

In Roddy alone, it seemed, was there any discontent. He had explained that Mrs. Meador had not been well and that Corinne was staying with her for a few days. But when the middle of December approached and Corinne was still with her mother, Sophronia became rather voluble on the subject of Roddy's living alone in the big house. For Roddy had withdrawn more and more to himself. His days he spent in work about the place. And at night he would shut himself in his "shop" soring and grading and completing his records, so as to be ready for another season's experimenting with his beloved corn.

Roddy's mood was rarely discussed by the others, but Silver knew that beneath their silence lay an intensity of feeling that one day must break the bonds of reticence that held it.

She knew, too, that while Corinne's absence had something to do with the way Roddy felt, behind it all was the growing resentment toward herself that had begun that night when she had told him of her intention to sell her land as soon as his lease had expired. That had rankled until he could think of nothing else. She knew, too, that the family was aware of it. That, undoubtedly, accounted for much of their restraint.

With Silver, it soon became an acute misery. She had come here seeking peace and had gradually become the center of a situation that was growing more intolerable every day. She tried to talk about it with Sophronia, but it was impossible to reveal to her all that had prompted her to act as she had done. She decided to go to Gerald Lucas, though she knew Gerald would only laugh at her.

It was a black, blustery night, and Silver put on her old leather jacket and her close-fitting tweed hat. She went out into the inky darkness and started toward the summit of the hill, when a sudden flare of light, like the striking of a match, arrested her attention through the small window of Roddy's workshop in the shelter of the slope.

Roddy must be in there, she thought, getting ready for another night's work. The thought of his self-imposed loneliness smote drearily across Silver's heart. Why should she not go to him now and talk to him—beg him not to remain away from his father's house because of her?

She stepped to the threshold and paused.

"Roddy!" she called softly. He scooped up handfuls of corn. "Well?"

"I came over to beg you not to—not to stay away from our house because of me," Silver said. "If that's the reason—"

He stood up and looked at her. At the painful flush that sprang into her cheeks, he stepped toward her with contrite haste. His feelings were in such confusion now that he could scarcely speak.

"I'm sorry, Silver," he said heavily. "It's certainly no time for me to hold out against you—after this. We don't seem to understand each other, that's all."

Silver turned her eyes from him. "I can't go in like this," she said. "It has been utter misery."

"I can't say I've been enjoying it myself," he looked down at her and saw that she shivering. "But listen—you'd better get back into the house," he remarked gruffly. "I'll try to clean this place up a little." He reached down and drew her to her feet, then took her hand in the most acute embarrassment he had ever known. "Let's forget it, Silver."

For a moment she permitted her hand to rest in his, then withdrew it hurriedly. Without a word she ran to the door and vanished in the darkness toward the stone house.

Later, when Roddy thoughtfully returned home, the strong wind beating up the slope against him seemed fantastically like that sudden impact on Silver's cold, slender body.

"Good Lord!" he muttered, and ran his hand across his eyes. "I must be crazy."

But as he lay in bed thinking over the events of the night, it was the memory of Silver Grenoble's clinging to him that gnawed and worried at the core of his being until at last as he stared up toward the invisible ceiling, his whole life seemed to be tangled in a hopeless maze.

He vowed savagely that tomorrow he would do two things—he would write a letter to Neal Anthony definitely rejecting his offer, and in the evening he would drive to Ballantyne and fetch Corinne home.

Beneath the cobalt glitter of the sky Roddy found himself driving along at a snail's pace, although he had forty miles yet to go—and fifty miles back home again, with Corinne beside him. Corinne had deliberately prolonged her visit with her mother, as Roddy knew, in the hope that he might finally accept Neal Anthony's offer, if only to please her. She had been affection itself, indeed, and always spoke regretfully of her prolonged absence. But Roddy had had time to do a little thinking about Corinne. She was young and spoiled and wholly untrained in responsibility. But she would grow up in time, Roddy reflected, and the passing months would bring to her a sense of her place in the scheme of things.

But there would have to be a change. For one thing, Corinne must be brought to realize that they would have to economize at every turn during the coming year.

It was two o'clock in the morning when Roddy returned to the farm with Corinne. She had broached the subject of Neal Anthony. When he told her of the letter he had written that day, Corinne had lapsed into a silence more deadly than any vitriolic denunciation he might have anticipated.

In the house she sank down on the couch in the living room and gazed blankly before her.

Roddy came over to her. He drew a chair, seated himself, and took her hands into his own.

"Look at me, Corrie," he begged softly. "Let's not begin like this. You don't know what it means to have you home again. And you can't guess how lonely it has been here without you."

She sighed and leaned back against the couch. Then she looked at him. "I wonder," she said slowly. "It's so easy to sentimentalize."

"Listen, Corrie, I know there's more to it than sentiment. It's a tough job, however you look at it. But we can make it easier if we tackle it together. I'm sorry about that job Neal Anthony threw my way. I wish I could have taken it—for your sake, Corrie. But—I couldn't. And some day you're going to be glad I didn't."

Corinne sighed again. "I'd rather not discuss it any more," she said coldly. "You've made your decision."

She drew her hands away from him and Roddy sat back in his chair. For a moment he regarded her thoughtfully. During the past few days a hope had formed in his mind that he must express to her—a profound and solemn hope on which, he believed, depended the scrutiny of their life together.

"All right, Corrie," he said at last. "We'll drop it—and start in again. But let us start in right this time. Let us face our problems together and work them out together. I want a home—a home with you, Corrie, where we can bring up our children and be happy together." He blundered on, hearing himself as though he, somehow, were groping in that cold fog of Corinne's eyes. "I've been thinking about that very thing while you've been away. If we had a baby, you'd find something to live for here. We'd be closer to each other, Corrie—"

WALKING ON A HIGHWAY

The American Automobile association and many other organizations interested in standardizing traffic regulations recommend the opposite side of the road from the vehicles going in the same direction. It is argued that this side is safer for pedestrians because it is easier for them to keep their eyes on vehicles coming toward them in front. But there is much difference in opinion and practice.

ROMANTIC OLD PORT WILL BE ABANDONED

Broome, Australia, Linked With Famous Pirate.

Washington. — Broome, Australia, once one of the world's most romantic ports, may soon join the ranks of abandoned towns, according to recent news reports. Its population is dwindling so rapidly that statisticians estimate the town may be extinct in another five years.

"Broome owes its decline as well as its early growth to the pearl oyster," says the National Geographic society. "Until recently western Australia produced three-fourths of the world's supply of pearl shell, and Broome was the center of the industry."

"In boom times, when mother of pearl brought $2,000 a ton, Broome's harbor swarmed with hundreds of pearling luggers. Now dozens of derelicts rot in the nearby muddy creeks and in the turquoise waters off the mangrove-lined coast. Ten years ago, 240 luggers sailed in and out of Broome. Today, ships operating in the Broome shell fisheries number only 87 and give employment to but a few hundred divers. In most of these vessels, engines that pumped air to two divers have been supplanted by hand pumps that supply air to only one diver."

Cut Down Output.

"In 1932, alarmed by the drop in pearl shell prices, pearlers of Broome agreed to secure less shell to stabilize the industry. This drastic action failed to revive the business, and at present, unemployed inhabitants of Broome are deserting it as rapidly as though it were a sinking ship."

"Broome has had a romantic history. It is associated with the seventeenth century pirate, William Dampier, the first Englishman to visit Australia. The town lies on the western shore of Dampier creek, within the northern headland of Roebuck bay, named after Dampier's ship, the Roebuck."

"In Broome's heyday, steamers from Fremantle, Australia, and Singapore arrived fortnightly, and the air service for the northwest section of western Australia called regularly. European residents lived in comfortable bungalows along palm-lined streets. Their children played in yards shaded by poinciana and baobab trees and attended well-equipped schools. A hospital, ice works, and a police station were indications of the town's modern development."

"The Asiatic quarter of Broome is truly Oriental. Here, homes of Asiatics are crowded together among warehouses and shops. In the latter, skillful pearl surgeons determine the value of pearls by 'skinning' them."

"Broome is periodically enlivened by exotic festivities. During the ceremony of the Feast of the Lanterns, the town appears more Japanese than Australian. Japanese, wearing swords and native costumes, flock to their cemetery to dance and sing for the entertainment of the departed divers."

Industry Grew Rapidly.

"For centuries, Malays have sailed across the Indian ocean to the coast of Western Australia for pearl shell. European exploitation of the shell began with its discovery in the harbor of Port Darwin in 1884. Although almost constantly hampered by strong tides and muddy water, the industry grew until it once drew 4,000 workers to Broome."

"Most of the shell secured near Broome is exported to England, America, and Japan, to be made into buttons, ornaments, and handles for cutlery. When the industry was thriving, luggers returned to Broome, heaped with pearl shells, some large as soup plates. The rigging was frequently festooned with dried oysters, which were sold as food in Japan. Crews were often allotted these as part of their wages."

"Since it was easy for divers to conceal pearls, at first, ship owners allowed them to keep those they found, relying on the shells for profits. But later, by employing mixed crews, ship owners found they could also obtain the pearls. Japanese, Chinese, and Malays, watching the opening of the oysters and mistrusting each other, saw that pearls were handed over to the captain."

"Other products brought in by the pearling luggers are tortoise shell, and black sea slugs found on the ocean floor and used for food in China and Japan."

France Lends Priceless

Art for Montreal Show

Montreal.—Eight tons of priceless Gobelin tapestries and Sevres china, owned by the French government, will be displayed at an exhibition to be sponsored by the French Chamber of Commerce here.

It is believed this is the first time the French government has allowed the exhibits to be taken out of the country.

NEW DOLLAR BILL DIFFERS IN DESIGN

Washington.—New one dollar silver certificates are being printed by the government and will be put into circulation soon, Secretary of the Treasury Henry Morgenthau, Jr., announced.

The new money, which will differ from the existing paper certificates in design but not in size, is being prepared because the treasury has adopted a new method of printing on the bills the signatures of the secretary of the treasury and the treasurer of the United States. Instead of being engraved on the dies the signatures will be printed from steel engravings just before the bills are issued.

Seizing upon this opportunity to change the design of the money, the treasury has placed on the back of the bill a reproduction of the Great Seal of the United States, picturing the reverse side of the seal for the first time in the history of American currency.

The front of the Great Seal is the familiar American eagle with a shield, grasping an olive branch in one talon and arrows in the other talon, surmounted by 13 stars and the Latin motto, "E Pluribus Unum."

The reverse of the Great Seal, used for the first time on money, shows an unfinished pyramid, surmounted by an eye in a triangular glory. The pyramid bears in Roman numerals the year of the Declaration of Independence, 1776. Above the eye is the Latin motto "Annuit Cooptis," rendered as "He (God) was favorable to our undertakings." The motto at the bottom is "Novus Ordo Seclorum" and is translated as "A New Order of the Ages." The eye and triangular glory symbolize an all-seeing Deity.

The pyramid is the symbol of strength and its unfinished condition denotes the belief of the designers of the Great Seal that there was still work to be done. Both the mottoes on the reverse of the seal are condensations of excerpts from Virgil's Aeneid.

The first committee on the Great Seal was formed on the afternoon of July 4, 1776, and consisted of Benjamin Franklin, Thomas Jefferson and John Adams. The Great Seal as finally adopted was largely the work of Charles Thomson, secretary of congress, and William Barton, a private citizen of Philadelphia. The design was officially adopted on June 20, 1782, by fundamental law. The Great Seal was again ratified after the Constitution was adopted in 1789.

Increased Air Mail Use

Due to Cut in Postage

Chicago.—Record air mail loads are being transported by United Air lines, which flew 638 tons in the last three months contrasted with 422 tons in the same period of 1934, President W. A. Patterson announced. A ton is equivalent to 2,240 pounds. A total of 38,280,000 letters and packages carried by United in the past three months. The increased mail loads, however, do not mean increased income for United, which is paid on a per-mile basis rather than on a poundage basis.

The increase is attributed largely to reduction of air mail postage to 6 cents an ounce and faster schedules, including overnight movement of mail from the Atlantic seaboard, Great Lakes and Middle West points to every city of 100,000 population in California, Oregon and Washington following United's recent schedule changes.

Fight White Snail Pest

With Flame Throwers

San Pedro, Calif.—Using flame throwers, one of the new developments of modern warfare, state and county agricultural men are fighting a long drawn battle against an army of white snails.

The snails dot the earth in clusters like white grapes, cover weed stalks and climb even to the crossbars of telephone poles. They have made damaging inroads on crops.

Crews with a special truck scour the hillsides with huge torches. The campaign of burning and poisoning is expected to last at least one year.

Finds Strange Penny

Chicago.—When William Carroll counted his change he found a strange coin. It is the same size as a penny. On one side is a portrait of Benjamin Franklin. Engraved on the other side are the words, "A penny saved is a penny earned."

Shanghai Great Gateway

Shanghai is the gateway for the great Yangtze-kiang valley, in which dwells half the population of China, or 260,000,000 people. The total population of the world is estimated at 1,800,000,000, so approximately one person in every nine on this earth trades through Shanghai.

Confirming a trend revealed by the previous month's figures, a Boston statistical organization's study for the month of August depicts a definite increase in the real income of the average American citizen. Living costs are going up, yes, but income as shown by wages, salaries and investment income is going up even faster to provide a greater sum total of comforts and luxuries that he can enjoy.

Wage earners have been the big beneficiaries during the last twelve months with an increase of 6.6 per cent, but the so-called white-collar workers, the salary earners, are not far behind since the salaries figures has increased more than 5 per cent during this period.

So far as the average American budget is concerned, only clothing costs were less on September 1, 1935, than on the same date a year ago; food, housing and incidental expenses are higher. During 1935, however, food prices have remained steady as have the costs of the other things which bulk largest in most family budgets. The real gain in August and in previous months has been through increases in cash income.

THE FARM AND HOME

Feeding plenty of mash is one of the best ways to increase egg production in October and November the months in which egg prices are usually the highest. Eggs are scarce in these months because many of the layers are molting.

Three ways to prevent soil erosion: terraces, cover crops, keeping steep land in grass. Now is the time to sow winter cover crops. Terraces may be made any time the ground can be worked. Plan to put the hillsides in hay, pasture or trees.

Sawdust makes a fair grade of bedding for dairy cows, horses and other livestock, but it is poor fertilizer. In fact, an excessive amount of sawdust, even though carrying considerable manure with it, will injure the productive capacity of the soil.

The time is at hand to improve old storages for vegetables and fruits, or to construct new ones. If none is available, it is possible to keep root and leaf crops in pits or trenches dug in the garden. Such a storage, however, must keep out water.

The AAA announces that the present price of potatoes to the farmers represents only about half the purchasing power that potatoes had during the 10 years just after the World War. About an eighth of all the farms in the United States grow potatoes as a cash crop.

Many housewives, rather than sell cull chickens at low prices, can them to use through the winter. They may be canned either fried or roasted. Circular No. 220, obtainable from county agents or by writing to the College of Agriculture, gives directions for canning meats, fruits and vegetables.

ASTHMA, HAY FEVER, HIVES
AND SICK HEADACHE

Spontaneous hypersensitiveness in man are big words that, without proper explanation, mean very little, but, as a matter of fact, spontaneous hypersensitiveness includes asthma, hay fever, eczema, and such common diseases which, while they rarely carry us to the grave, certainly make us exceedingly uncomfortable. Asthma attacks the muscular tubes of the air passages and causes these muscles to contract, thereby diminishing the volume of air that is breathed in. Hay fever attacks the membrane of the nose. Eczema may break out in the skin almost anywhere.

It has been found that, when both parents have suffered from hay fever or asthma, 58 per cent of the children have these ailments. When only one parent suffers from hay fever and asthma, usually just half of the children have the same ailment. But hay fever and asthma also develop in some children where there is no family history of this disease. When both parents are asthmatics or hay fever sufferers, children develop the same disease earlier in life than when only one parent is involved or when there is no history of these particular ailments in the mother or father.

Hay fever parents usually beget hay fever children, and asthmatic parents beget asthmatic children.

Hay fever is usually associated with August, the month in which ragweed pollen are most numerous in the air. But the hypersensitive condition of the nose can be brought about by other substances than plant pollens. Animal hair, dandruff, or such substances can cause it, as can face powders, perfumes and certain foods, such as strawberries, almonds, fish, etc., or it can be brought about by bacterial infections. In this instance it is not the bacteria that cause the disease, as in the case of a boil, but it is the component parts of the bacteria that are absorbed by the blood stream and come in contact with the nose in this way.

The cause of asthma can be the same as that of hay fever. Inhaling certain substances, ingesting certain substances as food or remote foci of bacterial growths, can cause an increased sensitiveness of the musculature of the tubes leading air to the lungs. This increased sensitiveness causes spasms of these muscles. It is during the period of spasm or cramps that the asthmatic is most uncomfortable. Another manifestation of hypersensitiveness to foods is the urticaria or hives that break out on the skin after the eating of certain foods.

In studies which have been carried on at the Illinois Research hospital in connection with the University of Illinois, it seems that an individual belonging to the asthma, hay fever, eczema or hives group is put together in a different way from the rest of us. These hypersensitive people are so constituted and constructed that they react in an abnormal manner to what would be normal to most of us.

The individuals who suffer from migraine headache, the sick headache that comes on with regular periodicity, really belong to the same general group as the hypersensitive persons do. This does not mean that the migraine is brought on like an attack of asthma or hay fever. But studies of the headache groups that we have made in our research laboratory have impressed with the fact that preceding an attack of sick headache, certain definite internal changes take place. These include changes in constituents of the blood, and there seems to be a difference in the internal metabolism of these migraine sufferers. The changes seem to be periodic, occurring some times at weekly intervals, and again at fortnightly, monthly or even longer intervals. Consequently, these sick headaches, although not brought on by inhaling plant or animal substances or by eating certain foods, seem to depend on a changing or unstable internal regulating system that makes the migraine patient closely akin to asthmatic and hay fever sufferers.

Our conclusion then is that persons suffering from asthma, hay fever, eczema, hives and migraine, have a very unstable involuntary nervous system.

The involuntary controlling machinery of their body functions is so regulated that it can be upset or thrown out of tune as a result of contact with irritating substances that to the rest of us produce no deviation from the normal. We know even less about the migraine group of sufferers than the hay fever group. The cause of the attacks of sick headache seems to be developed within the individual, because we can demonstrate certain internal body changes preceding the onset of migraine. It will be necessary to do a great deal more laboratory work before these spontaneous hypersensitive people and the migraine sufferers can be clearly understood. We must know more about the cause and how the body changes during the attacks of these diseases before we can attempt to prevent them.

SUCH IS LIFE—The Joke That Backfired

Make Zoo Animals More Comfortable

Popular Institutions Are Being Spruced Up.

Washington.—No longer are zoo animals to pad around in cold, bleak paddocks and even drearier cages. In many parts of the world zoological parks are being made increasingly colorful, and, what is more important, more comfortable for their guests.

A bulletin from the National Geographic society summarizes some of the amazing changes that have recently been made in these popular, educational institutions.

"The Province of Quebec's new collection of Canadian birds and wild animals reveals in a distinctly Norman atmosphere," says the bulletin. "The zoological gardens recently opened to the public at Saint-Pierre-de-Charlesbourg, about seven miles north of Quebec, contain a picturesque reproduction of an eighteenth century French Canadian village. A windmill, all the buildings that house animals, and a quaint stone bridge that leads visitors to the gardens, are of Norman architecture."

"Animals in the 'Picture Book Zoo' in New York city's Central park, which opened last December, are protected from weather by walls adorned with tiles, murals, and carved limestone friezes of animal groups. Since the zoo was designed to appeal particularly to children, each cage bears instead of prosaic signs, gaily decorated legends. 'I. Is Llama' and such phrases make balloon-carrying youngsters pause to read further. A gay Siellian pueblito and a pony track are other scheduled features of the zoo.

Like Original Haunts. "In the national zoological park in Washington, many of the animals' surroundings approximate those of their original haunts. Wolves howl from rock dens and goats climb a mock mountain peak. Most pampered of all are the reptiles who coil and uncoil against backgrounds colorful as a stage setting, painted to represent their native desert or jungle. Glass windows separate their heated cages from the public corridors. In the Milwaukee zoo, reptiles doze contentedly in warmth from electric heaters controlled by thermostats; while in the London zoo, they bask in artificial sunlight made by ultra-violet lamps.

"Ocean fish in the aquarium in the London zoo swim in salt water brought all the way from the Bay of Biscay. Elephants and giraffes of the Antwerp zoo live in elegant quarters.

"Guinea pigs in the Hannover zoo live snugly. Their house is a 2-foot replica of a summer resort hotel. When it was opened, zoo directors were afraid young Hanoverians might be tempted to step over the surrounding 10-inch-high fence and steal the guinea pigs. Instead, they swelled the hotel register by smuggling in their own pets!

An Animal Paradise.

"Outstanding among model zoological gardens is the Hagenbeck zoo at Stellingen, near Hamburg. Animals owe a vote of thanks to the Hagenbecks, who were the first to take them out of barred cages and from behind high fences and release them for exhibition in natural surroundings. In this animal paradise, lions, bears, and other carnivora roam freely on steppes, separated from the public only by yawning moats. Since the opening of this experimental garden over a quarter of a century ago, other zoos have removed many of their bars.

"The St. Louis zoological park also keeps bears, great cats, and simians in barless areas. In the Detroit zoo, elephants browse freely in unfenced tracts, and lions roar at spectators across a 30-foot moat. London, Chicago, San Diego, and Milwaukee exhibit many animals behind moats instead of bars.

"Planning model buildings for the exhibition of animals provides architects with hundreds of knotty problems. The houses have to be as carefully regulated to their inmates' needs as a bath to the baby. Heating pipes placed too low will devitalize monkeys. Cage floors must be properly sloped to drain. Pugnacious animals require mesh panels between their cages, and lions and tigers a space at the bottom of their cage frames through which keepers can safely push bones. Doors of cat cages must slide, never drop, as a dropping door might break a cat's back."

TOMORROW

By

LEONARD A. BARRETT

"Procrastination is the thief of time," True. How frequently we have said it. "I will do this tomorrow," but tomorrow never comes. We postpone until tomorrow the decision we should have made today. Circumstances changed over night and the opportunity was lost. Shakespeare wrote, "Defer no time, delays have dangerous ends."

The investment that could have been made today we put off until tomorrow and the old Spanish proverb proven true, "When the fool has made up his mind the market has gone by." The letter we were inclined to write today, the word we could have spoken, and the favor we could have done some person, we put off until tomorrow, then it was too late. The saddest memories are associated with "what might have been." The little word "if" is the most vitally determinative preposition in our language. Shun delays. Act.

Queen of the Traps

Mrs. John Sanders, better known as "Bunny," won the women's Grand American Handicap championship, 1500 yard event in trapshooting, at Vandalia, Ohio, with a score of 90 out of a possible 100 from the 15 yard line. She dethroned Mrs. Lela Hall, of East Lynne, Mo.

when the opportunity is at hand, especially when wisdom directs the path of service and duty. "Time is not a person we can overtake when it is gone." That most interesting character in Dickens' "David Copperfield," Micawber, was always waiting for something to turn up. He spent his life in anticipation—never experiencing realization.

The duty awaiting us is not tomorrow's duty but today's. When the battle is on the soldiers fight. It is the struggle of the present hour and not the forward look into things we can neither see nor understand that demand our time and strength. Every person lives his life with the present. The past is gone. It is "water over the dam." Nothing is more uncertain than the future. If we could only regard every day as the "whole of life" more happiness and contentment would be our lot. Cardinal Newman wrote, "I do not ask to see the distant scene, one step enough for me."

It is one of the illusions of life to think that the critical and decisive hour comes tomorrow. The most important hour is the present.

The decision made today determines both the spirit and events of tomorrow. Our real competitor is the "self" of yesterday and not the visionary "self" of some future time. One of the favorite poems of Woodrow Wilson was Wordsworth's "Character of the Happy Warrior;" a few lines of which are as follows:

Who not content that former worth
Lies dead and buried,
From well to better, daily self-surpass;
This is the happy warrior; for he
Is he that every man in arms
Should wish to be.

The Household

By Lydia Le Baron Walker

A WOMAN'S work basket is to her what a man's tool chest is to him. Each should be kept as the person wants it to be. Nothing is more provoking to a man than to discover that his array of nails or screws has been disturbed, that his hammer is missing, etc. And it is equally disturbing for the owner of a work basket to discover scissors are gone, spools are in a tangle, and needle book ransacked. But the cause for disturbance may lie with the man or woman. Let us discover, if we can, some of the ways in which the woman can keep her basket at its best, and the most convenient to use when needed in a hurry.

Spools of thread and sewing silk should always have the ends of the medium caught in the slashed end of the spool. This prevents threads unwinding, and getting tangled. It is wise to catch the strand before cutting off the needleful, for then the length is very short which otherwise may be almost long enough to go around the spool again, but not quite. If such an end gets a pull in the right direction, out it comes and then the thread unwinds just as if it had not been fastened at all.

Threaded Needles.

Threaded needles are a convenience, so when all the thread is not used after sewing, run the needle through the leaf of the needlebook or weave it through the top of the pin cushion kept in the basket, and then wind the thread over and under the point and then the eye end of needle. This will prevent the needle from getting unthreaded. When that color of thread is wanted again, pull the needle out by the eye, and this will release the coil about it, and the needle will be ready for the sewing.

Elastic bands can be made handy use of. Wind one about packages of needles and they will not get separated. If there is a tape measure that is not in a case (and many needlewomen prefer to have them loose), wind the tape and put a band about it to hold it tight so that it will not unfold.

Spools of white and very light colored sewing silk will keep from getting soiled, if they are put in very small cellophane bags. The transparency of the bags permits finding what is needed without taking the spools out.

The covered work basket is best since the cover keeps the contents free from dust, and also hides the assortment. Tidy as the basket may be kept, there is nothing especially attractive to look at inside. A work bag is convenient to carry about and the contents are hidden when the drawing is laid out. The one disadvantage about a bag is that it seldom opens wide enough to reveal the contents, which prevents getting what is wanted immediately.

Vogue for Glass.

The vogue of glass continues to rise on its wave of popularity. There is no abatement. Collectors are feverish in their desire to accumulate certain pieces of old glass difficult to find, and rare in consequence. The beauty of shape, the loveliness of color, and the tints on clear glass, all share in collectors' choices of pieces they most want. Indeed, some collections are built on just one of these characteristics. Vaseline, amber, and other yellow tints, are what some persons prefer. Deep reds and blues, delicate pink and clear crystal, all come in for their share of popularity. Certain shapes, such as pitchers, lamps, stemware, bottles, cup plates, etc., form the nucleus for other collections, which, however diversified, feature the one type.

In clear glass there are many variations in color, some having the beautiful bluish tint of Waterford glass, others being of crystal clearness. Whatever glass a homemaker has, if she is at all interested in this ware, she should assemble. Among the pieces if any have been in the family for a period of years, there are sure to be a few articles that are really excellent. There are many books on glass available in libraries, and there are talks on glass which can be heard, and from each of these sources knowledge of the glass can be acquired. One of the fascinations which collectors find in glass is the difficulty of authentication. Pieces which are marked are rare, and copying kinds of glass and patterns, or making of kinds and colors alike was and continues to be a common practice. Designs may be copied, or different designers may have developed patterns of the same sort in separate factories. In all these instances, and many others, there is a problem of identification.

Lesson for October 6

ISAIAH PORTRAYING THE SUFFERING SERVANT

LESSON TEXT—Isaiah 53:1-12.
GOLDEN TEXT—But he was wounded for our transgressions, he was bruised for our iniquities: the chastisement of our peace was upon him; and with his stripes we are healed. Isaiah 53:5.

PRIMARY TOPIC—God's Best Promise.
JUNIOR TOPIC—Isaiah Portrays Jesus' Coming.
INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—What Our Salvation Cost.
YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—The Suffering Savior.

The prophecy of Isaiah is the grand center of the Old Testament. It pictures the Servant of Jehovah with great wisdom gloriously executing the divine purpose of redemption at the cost of great suffering.

1. The Servant's Triumph (Is. 52:13-15). The Servant here means the coming Messiah (42:1).

2. His wisdom (v. 13). He will deal prudently, for his name is Counselor (9:6). He was filled with the spirit of wisdom and understanding (11:2).

3. He shall be exalted and extolled (v. 13). Being the mighty God, even Immanuel, Jehovah has highly exalted him (Phil. 2:9).

4. The appearance of the Servant (v. 14). Because of his marred visage, the Jews, who looked for outward signs of royalty and worldly splendor, were not attracted to him.

5. The issue of his ministry (v. 15). In his sprinkling of many nations he is revealed as the great High Priest, sprinkling the nations with his blood and cleansing them from their sins.

6. The Servant Despised and Rejected (53:1-3).

1. The unbelief of the Jews (v. 1). They despised the words of the prophet and failed to recognize the hand of the Lord in the miracles he wrought.

2. The origin of the Servant (v. 2). He sprang out of a stump of Judah. The sad condition of the people at that time is expressed by "dry corn." He came among his own and they appeared to him not.

3. A man of sorrows (v. 3). As the Sin-bearer of the world he suffered untold sorrows. The primary cause of his grief was their contemptuous rejection of him.

III. The Vicarious Suffering of the Servant (53:4-6).

1. His griefs and sorrows were ours. Though innocent, he was loaded down with disease and pain; not his, but ours. This awful suffering was looked upon by the world as occasioned by sin.

2. He was beaten for us (v. 5). That which was our due was meted out to him. Notice the four significant words: "wounded," "bruised," "despised," "stripes." The word "our" shows that his sufferings were vicarious. The full meaning of the cross is comprehended in these words.

3. The reason (v. 6). All humanity, Jews and Gentiles, had gone astray. God had laid on him the iniquity of us all.

IV. The Death of the Servant (53:7-9).

1. His strange silence (v. 7). He went as a lamb to the slaughter. How unlike men who, when wrongfully condemned, make a great ado.

2. Unconcern of contemporaries (v. 8). Though dying instead of the wicked people, they failed to discern that his suffering was in their stead.

3. Buried with the wicked and the rich. This was fulfilled in the crucifixion between two thieves, and burial in Joseph's tomb.

V. The Servant's Ultimate Victory (vv. 10-12).

1. His suffering expressed the divine will (v. 10). The Lord himself laid this burden upon Christ. He was delivered according to the determined counsel and foreknowledge of God.

2. A spiritual progeny resulted from his death (v. 10). Christ declared, "Except a corn of wheat fall into the ground and die, it abideth alone." The fundamental law of the universe, which is life out of death, found supreme expression in Christ's death on the cross.

3. Through death shall come the realization of his fondest hope (v. 11). "He shall see the travail of his soul and shall be satisfied."

4. The divine reward (v. 12). The divine Conqueror shall share the spoils of victory which by a strong arm were secured. Though he took the price of a sinner, it was for the purpose of bearing the sins of many and making intercession for the transgressor.

VI. The Servant's Suffering Historically Fulfilled (John 19:17-37).

When Jesus of Nazareth went forth bearing his cross to Golgotha, where they crucified him, the prediction of Isaiah was historically realized.

Thought

In the end, thought rules the world. There are times when impulses and passions are more powerful, but they soon expend themselves; while mind acting constantly, is ever ready to drive them back and work when their energy is exhausted.

Insistence

The ministry of personal influence is something very wonderful. Without being conscious of it, we are always impressing others by this strange power that goes out from us.—Huck Miller.

As to College Wardrobe, Here's What

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

A LOGICAL way to assemble the all important "back-to-school" wardrobe is to divide it into two types—the "musts" which are absolutely necessary, and the "would like to have," which make clothes a thrill and a venture.

In the "musts" smart shirtwaist frocks in the new silk weaves should alternate with sweater and skirt outfits. We speak particularly of "new silk weaves" because that's what they really are—"new." Handsome, practical, dependable wearing silks which have the "look" of wool, are the last word in smart fabrics. Don't overlook, especially, the new spun silks which have a rustic-looking rough surfaced texture. These noil silks, as they are sometimes called, are practically crushless, and though they look like wool they are much cooler for early fall days and steam-heated class rooms. They launder nicely, too.

The girl seated in the little inset picture is off to class in a strictly tailored frock of plaid noil silk which, to look at, you would think was wool. The dress buttons down the back and has cuffs and Peter Pan collar of pique.

The shirtwaist dress is full of bright ideas this fall. Round yokes, jeweled or fancy metal buttons, fur Peter Pan collars glorify the new silk models. Skirts have silk pleats; box pleats placed just above the knee all around are new and girlish looking.

The two-piece type of dress vies with one-piece styles. Perfect for campus wear is a two-piece frock as pictured to the left in the illustration. It is made of one of the chic tie-silks which are having such a pronounced vogue. This one is wine color with green dots. The blouse has flap pockets and the skirt buttons all the way down the front.

Prom-trotting daughters can really let themselves "go" on the subject of clothes. They can be glamorous and exciting and sophisticated and gloriously young, too, in satin, silk velvet or one of the new metal silks. This year's evening frocks go in for molded bodices and waistlines, wide belts or sashes and fullness spreading gently from the waist. Bodices are tricky. Sometimes they are merely a straight band of the fabric held up by camisole or "shoestring" straps. Again they are built up to cover the front of the throat in elaborately twisted, draped and winged treatments, with low-back décolletage.

Girls adore black. Let your daughter wear black in gleaming slipper satin or black velvet and then tell her to have her beau send her flowers for her hair instead of her corsage if she wants to be swish. Daughter will be very grand in a black slipper from frock as pictured. It has the high-in-front, wrinkled effect above mentioned, contrasting the low-cut décolletage at the back. The shiny belt is all-over-stitched, which is the latest wrinkle for belts.

If your young hopeful is going to a co-ed college, she will want a few soft dressmaker-type afternoon dresses. For tea dancing nothing could be more ideal than a black silk-satin ensemble. Don't merely ask the salesman for "satin." For satisfaction in wear and appearance specify silk satin and insist upon it. The dress should have a cowl neck—that means glittering clips to daughter. The jacket should be cut on the classic lines of her sports jacket, with patch pockets and notched lapels. The skirt should come just below the break of the calf. Worn with one of the new baby bonnets of black silk velvet with ostrich plume tips, daughter will be devastating to her "date."

EVENING ENSEMBLE

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

Velvet for evening, velvet for day, time, velvet, velvet, velvet! All signs point to a velvet season. The evening ensemble pictured is of deep red stiff velvet—a Chanel model. Luxurious marten collar and cuffs add to the glory of this superb creation. Note the button fastening of the gown. Many of the Paris dresses show a down-the-front button closing. Often on sheer or lightweight materials dozens upon dozens of tiny buttons are placed as close as possible and the effect is utterly feminine and charming.

FASHION SIGNALS GREEN FOR AUTUMN

Yellow, the sun's own color, is usually a summer favorite. This year has been no exception; yellow with brown, yellow with black and yellow with green is yellow still. This brings to mind that green is being wangled on as the follow-up color.

When utterly satiated with the idea of current fashions it's a relief to be able to peer into the future. On a recent peek behind the scenes the discovery was made that green looked good to many manufacturers whose fall lines are in preparation. And why not? It's one of the Renaissance colors and a change from the inevitable browns, reds and rust. Each autumn brings a change also from the blues in which we have been steeped all summer.

There are a number of likely looking green woolen dresses ready to make their shop window debuts. Some of them are sure to win applause. It won't be long now before shopping throngs will flatten their noses against the plate glass front which shields the cloth-clad mannequin from the street.

Green, White Jade Having Tremendous Vogue in Paris

Green and white jade is having a tremendous vogue of popularity in Paris now. One-third of every jewelry shop window is devoted to fascinating carved necklaces, pins, clips and earrings, while fat rounded bracelets of uncarved jade are matched by round jade rings. Knick-knacks of carved jade such as small, fat Buddhas on jet stands, ugly little monkeys and awkward elephants are made in green and white jade and vary in size from tiny miniatures to statuettes of 8 or 10 inches in height.

Fall Fabrics

Mileage used by smart designers for evening clothes include velvet, lame, exotic fabrics, "cellophane" mixtures, brocade and lace.

BUYER DELUDED OFTEN BY COLOR TEST FOR FRUIT

The housewife who bends over a fruit stall and picks brightly colored oranges in preference to the paler type is wasting her time, for the color of the fruit has no bearing on the nutritive content, reports a bulletin from the Department of Agriculture. There was a time, the writer remarks, when a farmer who produced a crop of pale oranges could not expect to receive as high a price for his yield as his neighbor whose fruit grew in brilliantly colored skins, but scientists took the situation in hand and developed a plan to outwit mother nature's apparent lack of interest in the pale fruit. The treatment, which is a highly technical process, embraces the use of ethylene gas.

The action of ethylene gas on pale fruit tinged with an unripe green shade is best described as a forcing or hastening of the process which changes tree foliage from green to brown in autumn. The passing of time kills greenery in most cases, and the process used on fruit is simply a speeding up of the change.

Ethylene has no effect whatever on the acid-sugar content which is the scientific test of ripeness in fruit. The Department of Agriculture recognizes the ethylene gas process as a legitimate trade practice for mature fruit. On immature fruit, its use is strictly prohibited, however.

HITCH-HIKING FLY SPREADS DISEASE

The common house fly is a hitch-hiker. However, the fly doesn't bother to jerk a thumb and ask a ride; it flies into moving autos or even trains or airplanes without permission and often travels hundreds of miles before leaving its chosen vehicle.

This habit of flies traveling great distances on other power than their own has made local fly eradication campaigns less effective than the campaigners hoped. Cases have been found where a fly carried disease germs on its legs and body for miles and infected people in the community where it settled. No previous cases of the disease were in existence in the new community and health authorities could find no other source of infection than flies.

Repeated warnings of physicians and health officials have apparently failed to instill a proper fear of the house fly in the average mind. However, a more thorough knowledge of the habits of a fly would increase the respect for this tiny insect, according to authorities on the subject.

Decent cleanliness in any home requires protection against the menace of flies. Whether a fly is home-born or a hitch-hiking visitor, he is a danger. Fortunately, an effective fly-killing program can be conducted in any home by the use of a reliable fly spray containing an ample quantity of pyrethrins, a product derived from pyrethrum flowers, which is deadly to flies, when sprayed in a fine mist.

Frock That Puts Accent on Youth

PATTERN 9343

Always a good beginning, this youthful tailored collar on the simple yoke makes a demure foil for the dainty softness of the bodice. The prettiness of the chic frock is furthered with a graceful, flare sleeve—or it may puff, if you prefer. The results are so satisfying you'll find it real fun to run up this little dress in a dainty printed silk or cotton. A soft handkerchief linen would be stunning, too, and so easy to tub. Buttons and belt can pick up a color in the print and make a striking accent.

SEASONAL DISORDERS

This time of the year your body is weakened and vitality is low. due to the long, hot summer. Therefore, sluggishness and pains in the back and other parts of the body, due to nerve pressure, manifest themselves. For example two years ago, I treated a patient having severe headaches, pains in the back, extending around the body, some prostatic ailment. Examination showed spinal irregularity causing nerve pressure to be responsible for his trouble. I corrected this condition. The patient of his own accord visited me and told me he had not had the slightest pain in two years.
