The bride of the wilderness.

By Rene R. Smith.

Far away in the wilds of the British domain, there lived a girl who was known far and wide as the "Wild Dove of the Wilderness." Her name was Pocahontas, and she was the daughter of the great Powhatan, chief of the Chickahominy Indians.

Pocahontas was a gentle and kind-hearted girl, and she was loved by all who knew her. She was a friend to the English, and she often went to their settlements to help them.

One day, while Pocahontas was sitting on the bank watching the ships come in, she saw a great commotion on one of the vessels. She followed the noise and found that a young Englishman named Capt. John Smith had fallen overboard.

Pocahontas, who was a brave and determined girl, did not hesitate. She leaped into the water and swam out to the ship. When she reached Capt. Smith, she grasped his hair and pulled him to the edge of the ship. Capt. Smith was soon saved, and he was overjoyed to see the brave girl who had saved his life.

After Capt. Smith was saved, he came aboard the ship and talked with Pocahontas. He was impressed with her courage and her kindness, and he told her that she was a true friend to the English.

Pocahontas and Capt. Smith became good friends, and they often met on the bank to talk and share their thoughts. Pocahontas often went to the ship to visit Capt. Smith, and she would bring him food and water.

Pocahontas was loved by all who knew her, and she was a true friend to the English. She was a brave girl, and she was a true friend to all who knew her.
WED., EVENING, JULY 26.

Mr. King is now in the city, as long as he can be so conducted, with the assurance in his mind that he will be received in the same way as he has been entertained by the Methodist church on each of the several occasions he has visited this city.

We understand that Mr. King has been in the city of Memphis, or any other city that may be of consequence, and that he will be received in the same way as he has been entertained by the Methodist church on each of the several occasions he has visited this city.
