Events of the last few weeks have moved with such dramatic velocity that the ordinary course of events and processes can no longer be evaluated. For the moment Prime Minister Chamberlain's peace-at-any-price policy has succeeded Europe from the brink of a second world war. For now, he must rely upon the support of the British people to resist German demands. But the situation will remain precarious until the situation in the settlement is clarified. The present position of the order-of-remeasurements in the German distem. People are taking the opportunity to move and secure properties now at low prices and are showing a reasonable attitude. But the threat of a new war is still present.

What Will History Say?
