COUNCIL PASSES 2 NEW ORDINANCES

The Mayor and City Council of Fulton met in regular session at the City Hall Monday night. Routine business and reports were transacted.

Jim Stone was appointed as tax assessor for the city, with Mrs. Ida Taylor, L. S. Phillips and Dick Hard other applicants.

The council decided to temporarily discontinue the use of the police patrol car in order to reduce expenses.

Two ordinances were passed by the council. One ordinance prohibits parking on any bridge in the city, with or without driver being in car; and also provides that cars shall not be parked more than 12 hours on city streets. A fine of $1 to $25 was placed for non-observance of this ordinance. The other ordinance provides that all inflammable trash and rubbish shall be burned by operators of stores when it is removed from his building. A fine of $1 to $25 will be assessed on the proprietor unless his premises are kept clear of such trash, or allow to scatter.

FIFTEEN FARMERS TAKE INVENTORY

J. B. Williams, Farmers of Fulton County are showing an increased interest in keeping a record of their business as indicated by all of the men who kept Farm Account books in 1935 starting books for 1936. In addition seven new books have been started.

Ernest Neisus, Field Agent from the College of Agriculture, spent two days in the county last week visiting farmers and helping to take inventories and start records. The eight farmers who kept account books last year turned their books in to be summarized and a business analysis will be made of their farms.

In June these men will be visited and assisted with their books and the summary of their 1935 business explained. Those who have kept a Farm Account book for two years are finding that the enterprises they are making them more money per dollar invested and time devoted than those that are not properly conducted. Inefficiency is clearly pointed out, as well as efficiency, in the summary of these books.

COUNTY AGENT NOTES

Grass should be sown with all lespedeza as the sod keeps the ground from washing and also prevents the loss of nitrogen by leaching during the winter. Circular 242 Practices in Seeding Meadow and Pasture Crops suggests a number of seed mixtures and may be had for the asking or writing the County Agent's office.

Red clover, orchard grass, red top and timothy should be sown now and lespedeza should be sown during the last half of March.

Baby chicks should be started soon if they are expected to lay early next fall—which might mean the difference between profit and loss to the owner.

Tested seed corn might save replanting an entire crop later in the spring.

Chicks from flocks that have been tested for White Diarrhea live better than chicks from most untested flocks.

If all the females of your herd of cattle have not been tested for abortion it can be done at no cost to the owner if he will make application.

Chester Davis, Administrator of the Agricultural Adjustment program, asks that farmers not plant more acreage than they were allowed under their contracts last year. The new program may be offered soon after planting time and then the farmers will be in position to carry on without destroying any crops.

FOR SALE: Several good gilts for sale. Will farrow this month. Hunter Whitesell, Phone 259.

BREEDING POULTRY FOR LARGER EGGS SAID TO PAY DIVIDENDS

Fayetteville, Ark.—It's not the hen's fault if they don't lay large eggs. As the size of the egg is an inherited characteristic.

Large egg strains are built up by selecting hens that lay large eggs, and mating them to a male bird that was produced from a hen that laid large eggs, according to G. W. Knox Jr., extension poultryman, University of Arkansas College of Agriculture.

Recent reports show that a grade of eggs known as "Jumbo" brought 45 to 44 1-2 cents per dozen on the New York market, while eggs of average weight brought 35 cents per dozen. The Jumbo eggs weighed 6 to 10 pounds more per dozen cases than the average weight of eggs. The Jumbo eggs came from the Pacific coast where breeding for egg size and egg yield has been practiced for a number of years.

Murray, Ky.—Miss Gladys Homra, a graduate of Murray State College in the August, 1935 graduating class, has accepted a position as home economics teacher in the Wickliffe High School, to fill the place left vacant by the resignation of Miss Geneva Belt.

Miss Homra, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. K. E. Homra, of Fulton, received her B. S. degree in home economics, qualifying for the teaching of Smith-Hughes home study work. While a student at Murray she was active in extra-curricular activities on the campus, being a member of the Allenian Literary Society, the Household Arts Club, and the Fulton County Club. Miss Homra held important offices in both of these clubs.

Miss Belt, who resigned to accept a government position, is also a graduate of Murray State, having received her bachelor's degree in home economics in the class of 1932.

PART TIME FARMING

SUBJECT OF STUDY
So much has been heard, especially in recent years, about city workers moving to the country to make a part of their living from the land, that the recently published bulletin of the Kentucky Agricultural Experiment Station, reporting a study of part-time farming families, should be of wide interest.

Good roads, cheap automobiles and unfavorable conditions for many city dwellers have served to create interest in the part-time farming back-to-the-land idea.

The Kentucky study deals with 329 families living near Louisville, Lexington, Richmond, Corbin and Barbourville. Each family produced a part of its living from the acreage it occupied while the head worked in town or at some other occupation than farming.

While many factors were studied by the investigators, their summary indicates that chief advantages in the part-time farming plan were found in the contributions of gardens, cows and chickens, plus cheap rent. Receipts from sales of produce added little to the cash income of the family.

Many of the families that had moved out of the larger cities had done so because they liked to live in the country and wished to have more room for their children.

The study was made by Merton Oyler and W. W. Rose of the department of farm economics, and the results are published as bulletin No. 358 of the Agricultural Experiment Station of the University of Kentucky.

GAIN IN INDUSTRIES
ALONG THE ILLINOIS
CENTRAL SYSTEM

There were 194 industries established along the lines of the Illinois Central System in 1935. They include seventy-six different types of business and employ approximately 5,000 workers. Last year was the ninth year of the last six in the industrial record of the railroad. Since 1929 the Illinois Central has acquired 832 new industries representing a capital investment of approximately $36,500,000. In making this statement, L. A.

Downs, president of the Illinois Central System, said:

"The railroad is a magnet that draws producers and markets together. We match up business opportunities among our patrons and thereby increase the wealth of our territory and bring traffic to ourselves."

"Recently there came to us a wooden box manufacturer looking for new outlets. His logical market on our lines appeared to be in the berry and vegetable shipping regions of the South. Then we heard from a veneer manufacturer, whose product went into berry and vegetable boxes. Then a timber operator who would welcome a chance to supply the veneer manufacturer with needed logs. By translating these sales possibilities into markets, we benefited all three industries and created employment and traffic."

"We welcome similar opportunities to function as a clearing-house for industrial information. It is our way of building traffic from the ground up, an essential adjunct to the running of our trains."

Through its industrial department the Illinois Central System keeps in touch with manufacturers seeking new markets or plant locations. Information is furnished regarding locations—along the railroad—such as raw material, labor, markets, transportation, power, legal services, industrial sites, financial and living conditions and educational, religious and recreational advantages. The Illinois Central also furnishes community organizations with outlines for use in compiling industrial surveys.

This industrial service is directed by Mark Penton, general industrial agent of the Illinois Central System whose office is at Chicago.

NO SUBSTITUTE FOR FRESH MILK AND EGGS

For farm families, there is no substitute for plenty milk and eggs in the diet, as they can be produced rather easily and cheaply. The younger children, as well as those of school age, should have a quart of milk and an egg daily. Nutrition courses in the home economics department of the College of Agriculture, University of Kentucky, stress the use of these two foods as growth promoting and increasing resistance to disease.

As a standard, seven quarts of fresh whole milk should be provided weekly for every child under 2 years of age, and one to three quarts for adults. If adults use skim milk instead of whole, extra butter should be used, to supply vitamins removed with the butterfat. One quart of milk daily for a child under 7 years old will safeguard him as to the amount of protein needed. Later, other foods such as eggs or lean meat are essential.

When a child is 3 to 4 years old, a poached or soft-boiled egg may be fed him regularly. Eggs are never a substitute for milk, but they are of great value when used in addition to it. They contain vitamins that are of help in preventing rickets, a disease due to dietary deficiency. If the egg supply is limited, the children should be considered first. It is never so easy to correct a bad physical condition as it is to prevent it in the first place, and children are especially in need of a full and balanced diet while they are growing.

A person's attitude and contribution in life depends in many respects upon proper nutrition. Solving of food problems, particularly for children, is worth time and effort.

DRAINAGE IMPORTANT IN MAKING THE LAWN

In making the lawn on a new area one should first provide good drainage, points out N. R. Elliott of the Kentucky College of Agriculture. Wet soil may be caused by a subsoil that does not drain well, or by surface water from the surrounding area. The drainage may be necessary, or the grade may be changed to correct surface drainage.

Deep, fertile, moisture-holding soil is best. Cover the entire area with a heavy application of well rotted barnyard manure, and plow to a depth of 8 inches. Harrow the plowed surface until it is reasonably smooth. Apply 1,000 pounds of superphosphate, 1,000 pounds of hydrated lime and 500 pounds of muriate of potash to the acre.

Disk and harrow the ground until these are thoroughly incorporated into the soil. This application will supply the phosphorus and potash needed for many years. It is much more effective to supply these in quantities before the lawn is established than to add them after the area is covered with sod. Topdress the soil with another application of well-rotted manure, preferably cow manure.

After this a good seedbed should be prepared by thorough harrowing and rolling. Keep in mind that the seedbed is being prepared to last a long time, and therefore the preparation should be thorough before any grass seed is sown.

For Kentucky, Mr. Elliott recommends sowing a mixture of four parts by weight of Kentucky bluegrass seed and one part of redtop.

COUNTY AGENT'S NOTES.

By J. B. Williams

The outlook for the early lamb market is good this spring provided the results of some germination tests made by the College of Agriculture on samples of seed corn this year.

Care should be used in selecting seed corn this spring as is indicated by the results of some germination tests made by the College of Agriculture on samples of seed corn this year. The seed corn was gathered from all parts of the state.

Russell Hunt, tobacco specialist at Lexington believes, with no control or acreage planted, a producer will have to produce his grade snuff tobacco in order to make a profit from his work. This means practicing proper growing and careful and intelligent methods of curing.

It is believed that if delinted cotton seed are planted on land that has been rotated in other crops, less loss will result from diseases.

Baby chicks should be hatched early in March if pullets are expected to lay early next fall.

Both cotton and tobacco are in unfavorable conditions in the 1936 outlook that has just been finished by the Agricultural Economics Department.

Seeding trees may be secured from the State Forest Service at a small cost per thousand. Anyone interested in starting some locust or almost any other type of forest trees can see a price list at the County Agent's office or get a price list by writing K. G. McConnell, State Forester at Frankfort, Ky.

COUNTY PLANNING RESULTS.

At four community meetings census figures were studied showing the acreage and number of livestock that were raised in the county. A county wide meeting of all the AAA committeemen was then called to discuss the figures for the county. Since there are 101,000 acres of tillable land in farms and according to the census report 1100 farms in the county, the discussion was made as if the county was a 101 acre farm. It was believed by this group that if thirty acres of land was cultivated to corn, cotton and tobacco and ten acres to wheat, 28 acres to pasture, ten acres to hay and 23 to lanes, buildings and woodlots.

It is believed with this system of cultivation the soil fertility would be conserved properly because the wheat or other small grain would be sowed on all cultivated land that was not to be cultivated the second year and establish a means of seeding hay and pasture mixtures.

No Compromise

Housewives who appreciate exceptionally fine products never seem to "compromise" with their grocer by accepting substitutes that are "just as good."

It is to this sense of appreciation that we owe a great deal of our progress. Year in and year out housewives never fail to recognize exceptionally quality in our Flour. Therefore, they accept no substitutes, but instead, they always specify:

PROMENADE DECK

by Ishbel Ross

SYNOPSIS: A luxurious five-month cruise around the world aboard the "Marenda" brings together a group of passengers for adventures, romance, entertainment—and tragedy—like in "Grand Hotel"—these passengers offer a study in human actions and reactions which unconsciously bare their souls. These characters are aboard the ship: Macduff, doug Scotchman, single, of middle age; Miss Mudge, school teacher, spending the savings of 20 years; Angela, faithful wife of Lovat, gigolo; Dick Charlton, first officer; Clare, a person of experience; Joan, a dissipated flapper; Joany, run-away wife; and Peter; Captain Baring, master of the ship—and his soul! NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY.

ELEVENTH INSTALLMENT

The girl had passed from frenzy to maudlin collapse. She was shivering as her protector dragged her firmly through the door. Down the companionway and along the corridors they staggered, the older woman moving with intent and decisive steps. At last they reached Joan's cabin and the girl flopped on her bed. Miss Mudge bent down and drew off her slippers and stockings. She made her sit up while she pulled her flowered chiffon frock over her head. Blushing vaguely she saw how little she wore, she gingerly drew off the scrap of lace that seemed to be all of her under-clothing. How lovely she was! Miss Mudge went into her wardrobe and found a nightdress—of silk soft that she could crush it in one hand. It was fragrant and sweet as acacia blossom.

"Comfy now?" she asked.

Joan's reply was an incoherent whisper.

Miss Mudge kissed her and tucked her up, dimly touched by her helpless state. Then she found he way to her own bed in the darkness for she could not bear the light just then. Her numbness was slowly passing and she was coming out of a fog, aware at last that something terrible had happened to her in the captain's quarters. In a full blaze of consciousness, she buried her face in her hands and sobbed. Miss Foster, wild and drunk and beautiful, had told the truth and stripped her to shreds, right down to the awful foundation of her cotton nightgown and her crumpled fringe.

Miss Mudge was seeing things a they were, and she felt alone and afraid, in a vast hall that stretched to infinity, a hall lined with flashing mirrors that reflected over and over again the cheapness of all her belongings. A week ago she had felt so sick. And the kiss from Mr. Charlton—act of pity? That had been cheap too. Her face was drained of life. For hours she lay on her bed without moving.

The cocktail party went on with the guests making feverish efforts to cover up the disappearance of Miss Mudge and Joan. Only Dick went out, after catching the eye of the captain. Angela shook herself clear of the horror she had gone through.

Captain Baring took out his violin and settled it tenderly under his chin. He played for them softly, Grieg and Bach. Angela sat entranced—not so much by the music as by the strange man who spent lonely nights on the bridge and could ring such feeling from his violin. When he had finished, he was still remote, as if his playing was a form of self-indulgence that he did not care to share with others. He listened to their compliments absent-mindedly and left them without a word.

Miss Mudge left the Marenda a San Francisco. She was pale and wore her glasses. Her fringe was straight and she had given her Spanish shawl to her stewardess. All of her vanities had been laid aside, for her mind worked clearly now, with everything out in the open. After her tips had been paid she had eight dollars left and her railway ticket to Ontario. That was that! She had travelled forty thousand miles but had failed to see the world. She had spent her life's savings and would have to begin all over again. Another twenty years with Agatha before it was time for them to retire on their pensions. Her dull life lay over her like a shade, ravelly she stepped down the gangplank, knowing that glamour was only an empty word. She was sure at last that there was only one sphere in which she could move. Hereafter she would keep her wings clipped to her surroundings, and her thoughts close to the ground.

She had avoided Dick since the cocktail party. He had sent her a note, kind and detached, telling her that she must forget every word Miss Foster had said. It was now among her souvenirs—a red balloon, a swizzle-stick, a cheap little Tunagra from Athens, a small carved god, her Jordan water, some gala favours, her autographed menus, a snapshot of him at Kandy. That was all. It was good-bye.

The people with whom she had chatted on deck and at table, exchanging addresses and promising lifelong friendship, had been busy with their own affairs to notice her undistinguished departure. There were two exceptions. Mrs. Wynant had been cordial, inviting her to visit her home in England, and Miss Arundel had kissed her warmly promising to send her some wedding cake. Miss Mudge fluttered along the pier. She had to get through the customs, but pain was fogging her vision, and the dragging weight deep in her inside, was getting worse each minute. For twenty years she had looked forward to her trip around the world. Now it was over, and she had nothing. She stumbled against a trunk and wiped tears from her eyes.

It was too late for her to see that Dick was watching her as she wandered with uncertain steps among the packing-cases on the wharf. His glance was kind, but he was thinking it was far, far better for Miss Mudge to be stepping back into her lustreless frame at Ontario than to see her in Wisconsin. He had avoided Miss Mudge since the cocktail party but only because she seemed to be keeping deliberately out of his way and he had taken his cue from her. There was nothing he could say to her, nothing at all.

The orchestra was playing. Its languid notes came drifting up from the ballroom. Patty's hand stole through Johnny's arm. He squeezed it hard.

"Good kid!" he whispered, and kissed the tip of her ear.

Patty sighed. "I love the swish of the sea in my ears. Life will seem so quiet, Johnny, when we're on land again."

"Life is just opening up for you," said Angela, watching her affectionately.

"I hope there's something in Johnny, for Patty is a fine girl," Macduff declared.

"I think there is, Macduff. You are a little hard on the young."

"Intolerable puppies, all cheek and ignorance!"

Angela laughed. "I've got rather fond of those two. I shall always wonder about them. When you're thrown together on a trip like this, and share the sort of things that we have shared, you get more attached to people than you would in thirty years at home."

"I wonder what's happened to the Langford woman," said Macduff, irrelevantly.

"She's probably not with Rumford by now, but she did all the damage she could while she was on the boat. She comes from New York, doesn't she? You may run into her some time."

"Angela," Macduff bent over, "would you ever want to live in New York?"

"Never."

Dick Charlton took off his jacket and put on his dressing-gown, he lit his pipe and sat down at his desk to read. A knock at the door. He opened it wide and found Joan standing outside, the strap of her satin frock slipping down over her arm, and her wild green eyes ablaze with light. Dick grew pale but controlled himself. He couldn't forget what this devilish girl had done to Miss Mudge.

"What do you want?" he demanded.

"I want to speak to you, Dick. I want to tell you I'm sorry. I swear I didn't mean to hurt her—or you. I swear I didn't."

"Joan, I hope never to see you again as long as I live," said Dick in a voice that stung like a lash.

"Oh, oh, Dick, you can't mean that! You can't have forgotten our night together."

"I've forgotten everything except your unkindness."

The door moved in her face.

"No, no, Dick don't do that!"

She was looking at the closed door. He had meant it, then. It was all over with Dick, who had seemed for a brief space to find her desirable. She knocked at the door again. There was no response. She would go to the bar.

An hour later Joan was on her way to the top deck again, with the vague idea of having a plunge to cool herself off. That idiot Macduff was standing at the top, staring down at her. Now would be a good occasion, as any to tell him what she thought of him. There were times when Joan burned to express her true opinion of some of her fellow passengers and here was a good chance.

"Looking for Mrs. Wynant?" she enquired, feeling up against him. He pushed her off. "No," he said.

"That's funny." She laughed on a piercing note. Macduff regarded her with disgust.

"I don't like your looks," said Joan, "and I don't like the way you're staring at me now. Who do you think you are anyway? You're scarcely human."

She probed him in the ribs. Macduff did not move.

"What I like the way you can drink," she grew confidential. "Come to my room."

"No thanks."

"All right, big boy. Joan's going to have a swim."

She made a gape gesture and followed a twisting course to the pool. Macduff watched her, wondering if she weren't tipsy enough to drown. What an appalling sight. Even before she had reached the door she stepped down, caught her foot at the hem and began to pull it over her head. He could see her long, slim legs. The pool was dark, except for the green light in the far corner. Her dress came off and was flung to the floor; then she spread her arms for a dive. He caught a glimpse of her gleaming back in the second before she jumped. He waited for the splash, hoping that it would sober her up. It was his duty to see that she did not drown.

But no splash came. Only a dull crash that sickened Macduff and hurried his footsteps through the door that Joan had entered. God in Heaven the tank was drained! For a moment he shut his eyes, then leaned over the edge to look. The green light spread its sickly confusion and there, on the toilet, lay Joan. She was naked except for her beads, garters, stockings and sandals. One of her stockings was halfway down. Her arms were spread like wings. Her face he could not see. It was crushed on the tiles. Slowly he realized that the girl must be dead. Though a must he saw her dress lying on the floor beside him, flame red, still warm from her body. There was no other trace of her, not a scrap of underwear. She had died as recklessly as she had lived.

The ship was heaving gently, rocking her white body. On every deck people were packing for landing. No one could know that he was standing here alone, guarding lifeless for. He must start the horrible chain of machinery moving. Two girls dead across his path! Jenny in the China Sea and he clung of her heel on his wall, Joan with her brains dashed out before his eyes. He had sworn to avoid all human contact, yet fate had caught him twice in the orbit of death. Was it punishment for vowing that he would travel alone and safe? Were people not intended to avoid one another and the burden of mutual care? Had he been ducking life and had Angela touched his sensibilities last? Was there something else that one must head besides the inevitability of one's solitude and the warmth of a glass of whiskey? Macduff's strong Highland sense of superstition was aroused. Sweat stood on his brow. Thoughts flowed through his mind in molten masses. The numbness of forty years was wearing off and each nerve was a red-hot needle, coming to life and pricking him.

But the moments were flying.
