FULTON HIGH

The Wildcats of the Hickman High School put in one of the most successful seasons of recent years, having established an enviable scoring record of 688 points over their opponents. Hickman played 24 games during the season, winning ten of them. The Wildcats have been sensational scorers, and they have done some most remarkable playing, coming off loser by a narrow margin in the district tournament at Hickman last week. These boys are going to work mighty hard to take the regional, and will be found in there fighting until the end. Between Hickman and Fulton, other teams are going to find it a tough proposition to win over both.

Today down with the hearts of participants in the First Regional basketball tournament jumping with eager anticipation and hope. Today marks the opening of the First Regional tournament in Fulton at the beautiful and spacious Science Hall, at the Fulton High School, when 61 teams come here from West Kentucky counties, with the determination of carrying their respective team to the top, and a chance to play in the state tournament at Lexington.

Western Kentucky's powerful host of aspirants to the inter-scholastic basketball championship of Kentucky moved into regional play last Saturday afternoon. Barlow and La Center won out in the first district at Wickliffe, Fulton and Hickman, Tilghman and Mayfield in the third at Mayfield, and Kirksey and Birmingham in the fourth at Benton. These eight teams meet here at the Science Hall today and tomorrow. The following record of the finals is the four district tournament gives a good idea how the eight teams rank: Tilghman won over Mayfield 22-20, needing two extra frames to win; Fulton defeated Hickman 15-11; Kirksey conquered Birmingham 34-32; Barlow won over La Center 32-20.

Drawings for the First Regional basketball tournament scheduled at Fulton today (Friday) and tomorrow were held at the Hall Hotel in Mayfield Sunday afternoon. Coaches representing the winners and runners-up in the fourth district finals Saturday night attended the drawing along with J. O. Lewis, Fulton, secretary of the Western Kentucky Athletic Association.

The tourney opens Friday (today) at 3 P.M. with Mayfield opposing Kirksey. At 4 P.M. Friday Hickman and Barlow take the floor. Friday night at 7 o'clock Fulton will battle Birmingham, and at 8 P.M. Paducah will take on La Center to complete the first round tests. The semi-finals will be contested at 10 and 11 A.M. Saturday morning, and the final is scheduled for 8 P.M. Saturday night. John Miller of Murray, and Herschel Devers of Metropolis, Ill., will referee the games.

Kirksey High School played nineteen games during the season, winning all of them. This team scored 711 points to their opponents 335 points. Washer, Kirksey center, led his team in scoring by dropping the ball through the basket to tally 385 points himself for an average of 21.4 points each game played by him. Copeland ran up a total of 201 points for his team during the season. Teamwork and fast floor work with dependable defense by the guards make this quintet one of the most dangerous in the entire region, and this aggregation is expected to reach the finals.

GUESS WHO?

What's your guess as to which team will win the Regional Tournament here? Predictions are many and varied. We like everyone else, have no opinion—but what are guesses worth in games of skill? Anyway, after studying all the records, we venture the conclusion that Kirksey stands a good chance to win over Mayfield, Barlow over Birmingham, and Paducah over La Center. That Kirksey will defeat Barlow, and Paducah will win by a tight score over Fulton in the semi-finals. Not being able to make up our minds on whether Kirksey or Mayfield will go to the final, a flip of a coin decided Kirksey for us. So in that case, we pick Kirksey to capture the tournament honors by a small margin over Paducah. But as we say, what good are opinions. All "dope buckets" may be upset.

MANY PRIZES FOR 4-H CLUB MEMBERS

The Illinois Central railroad, long a friend of 4-H clubs, again is offering seven prizes for the best club work in the 23 counties which it serves in Kentucky.

Each county may compete for one prize, and from the 23 counties the 4-H club department at the College of Agriculture will select seven winners. The prizes will be sufficient cash to defray expenses to the National 4-H Boys and Girls Club Congress and International Live Stock Exhibition in Chicago.

For more than 10 years, the Illinois Central railroad has recognized the value of 4-H club work by offering prizes to worthy boys and girls in the territory which the road serves.

Other prizes available this year to club members include county, state, sectional and national prizes in meat animal projects, donated by Thos. E. Wilson, Chicago, chairman of the national committee on Boys and Girls Club Work. All boys and girls fattening or raising beef calves, swine or sheep are eligible to enter this contest.

A gold medal will be awarded the winner in each county, and the state champion will receive a watch. There also will be four sectional prizes of trips to Chicago for the United States, and three national prizes of scholarships to college.

PROMENADE DECK

by Ishbel Ross

SYNOPSIS: . . . A luxurious five-month cruise around the world aboard the "Marengo" brings together a group of passengers for adventures, romance, and tragedy. Like in "Grand Hotel" these passengers offer a study in human actions and reactions which unconsciously bare their souls. These characters are aboard the ship: Macduff, doctor; Scotchman, single, of middle age; Miss Mudge, school teacher, spending the savings of 20 years; Angela, faithful wife of Lovat, gigolo; Dick Charlton, first officer; Clara, a person of experience; Joan, a dissipated flapper; Jenny, run-away wife, and Peter; Captain Baring, master of the ship, and his soul.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY

Twelfth Installment
Joan was dead, but things did not end there. He must rouse Dick Charlton, who was obviously the person to handle this. A knock on his door brought Dick out, his boots still in his hand.

"Come quick, Charlton," said Macduff, "Joan Foster is dead. She jumped into the pool. It was drained for landing tomorrow."

For once in his life, words tumbled from Macduff's lips without deliberation. His eyes were bloodshot behind the impersonal glare of his spectacles. Dick went white and caught at his arm. Without a word he followed Macduff across the corridor and passed from brilliant light into the darkness of the pool. Briefly he hung over the edge, then covered his face with his hand. Macduff stretched out an arm and gripped him round the shoulders.

"It's all right, old man," he said, "realizing that the girl had meant something in Charlton's life. 'I would have been hell for her, had she lived.'"

"She came into my room tonight. I shut the door in her face. The words were squeezed through Dick's closed teeth. He pulled himself together. He was the chief officer. "I must report at once to Captain Baring," he said, automatically.

Once more Dick looked at Joan whose pale body was moving softly with the rise and fall of the boat. Her rhinestones shone like cat's eyes through the green gloom. A dark trickle spread over the tiles.

Macduff went down to his cabin which was as austere as when he had sailed. He had spurned the spears of Borneo, the leopard skins of Darjeeling, the mandarin robes of China, and was landing empty-handed. He turned on all the lights, to shake off the feeling that he had been staring for hours into a darkened cave. The sea rolled smoothly under the port hole, but the night was black and moonless. With an effort he forced the dead girl out of his thoughts.

In a few hours now he would be back in Gramercy Park. Angel would be on her way to England as he was reaching home. Would her heart stand the strain of his meeting with Wynant? Would the dead consider her health in his anxiety to shake her off, now that he had met a seventeen-year-old whom he wanted to marry? Strange, strange, thought Macduff, for the hundredth time, that a woman like Angela should love a man like Wynant! And Jenny wild about Rumford, wild enough to have squeezed herself out through the porthole for love of him. Macduff got up and examined the brass ring. How in hell had she managed to do it? That was something he never would be able to understand. He'd see how far he could sail himself through, and what the water was like from a porthole at night. Catching the rim, he pulled himself up by his arms. His head went out, and he saw the water below, smooth as black marble, but he could get no farther. His shoulders balked him at once. "Thin as she was," he thought, "I still don't see how she did it. She must have had nerve and the strength of desperation."

With a sharp recoil he thought of Joan again, and wondered if her body were still being rocked in the tiles. He began to undress, hanging his tie on the rack, folding his trousers carefully, putting his coat on a hanger. Every move took time. At last he donned his striped pyjamas and pulled down the covers of his brass bed. Climbing between the sheets, he lay on his side, smoking and thinking. Tomorrow they would land. Dressed in his usual, and all that bothered Angela wouldn't be here, but on her way to England, how strangely Joan's head had flashed in the green light! The only thing about her that had seemed alive. Macduff reached out for his bottle and poured himself a wee loch-an-dorach. He downed it straight and put out the lights, but his pipe still glowed in the dark.

Angela was an exceptional woman. She made him feel at times that life was superb, and that he could write much better if she were always near him. Without any talk, she inspired a man to effort. The glow of his pipe grew feebler. At last he lunged it out on the washstand, sighed and settled himself for sleep. He could hear a grinding below, that crunching sound of the anchor chain he had heard so often lately, and always for new ports, new scenes, new faces. The engines were in reverse; the boat was swinging around. They must be at Quarantine! That meant home. They would lie there for the rest of the night. Macduff rolled over to the wall. The throbbing ceased at last, and stillness descended on the ship, broken by the laughter and cries of the last night revelers. Their voices, drowned before by the pounding sound of the boat in motion, were strangely strident now. The flying steps of excited girls could be heard along the corridors. Everything seemed extraordinary clear, now that the ship had anchored. Macduff felt as if he had emerged from the Cave of the Winds. At last he fell asleep.

Angela's name was on his lips when he awakened five hours later, looking as hard as a rock, sober and fresh. His first thought was, "I'll soon be saying good-bye." Then he remembered Joan, with a catch in his breath. Gently! He was sorry for Charlton. When his steward came with his coffee, he cursed him because it was cold. Dressing himself with care, he selected the dark green tie that Angela had helped him to buy in Manila. He walked along the corridor and out on the deck to find that they were moving slowly up the bay in the haze of the early morning. The shore and the water seemed dead, dull after the sharp contrasts of the tropics. There was nothing in the neutral landscape to excite the eye until the skyscrapers came into view. The passengers did not look like themselves this morning, for they were all toggled out in their city clothes. The celebrants of the night before were slowly coming to life, feeling sick and depressed. Couples who would soon be parted hung together at the rail, watching the encroaching shore line with dismay. One youth was fumblingly trying to say good-bye to a girl whom he now adored. Soon he would be meeting his bride of a year, and their baby, born a month ago. His hand plucked nervously at his companion's coat. Their glances were telling their story, but nobody cared. Angela was there—cool, composed, in a black tailored costume and a small black hat, with a fur around her shoulders. Her face was drained of color. As usual, she had dreamed through the night of Jenny's face and her thin, pale hands clutching at the water. It dawned on Macduff that none of them knew about Joan, not even Angela. He moved over towards "Good-morning, Angela."

"Macduff, I'm glad to see you. I was afraid you were sleeping in. I wanted you to watch the skyline we me. It's thrilling."

"I'm sorry to see it," said Macduff, gloomily.

"Not really."

"Yes, really."

They stood close together and watched the buildings swimming into view—tall grey spires, glittering through the morning haze, like a gigantic fresco flung against the sky. Angela could imagine thousands of people going to work, typewriters clicking behind the myriad panes of glass, and captains of industry starting out on their daily tasks.

"An exciting city!" she exclaimed. "Yes, if you get what you want in it," Macduff conceded.

"I shall feel quite dull when I get back to my tulips and roses, knowing that, all over the world, Japanese and Chinese and Filipinos and Hindus are doing these strange things we have seen them at, with everyone grasping for a little bit of happiness near at hand. And in America the great panacea is work, isn't it?"

"One simply has to work in New York or perish of boredom and disapproval," Macduff observed.

Angela's thoughts were centered on Macduff, who was looking profoundly miserable. She hated to leave him. Such a good friend, such a good companion! Her black-gloved hand touched his sleeve.

"Macduff, I think we must say good-bye."

"Not good-bye, Angela." His lips were stiff with cold.

"Yes, my dear, at once! Now leave me before I burst into tears. I shall see you some time in England."

Macduff caught and held her hand. Slowly to his chest and his eyes burned into hers.

"Angela," he said, "I—well, good-bye!" he snapped, and turned his back on her.

The gangplank was down. He walked across it in time to see Johnny embraced by his father, and to hear him say: "Dad, this is Patty, your future daughter-in-law." He saw Johnny's father catch her hands, and Patty's piquant face turned up to him, sweet and eager.

"Good-bye, Mr. Macduff," Johnny shouted. "We're going to send you an invitation to our wedding."

"Good-bye and good luck," Macduff responded, cursing as he made his way to the letter M in the customs shed. Halfway down the wharf he noticed Dick talking ardently to a girl in powder blue. She was handing him a card with an address, while she devoured him with her eyes. He remembered now that it had been like this at every port, always a girl waiting for Dick—except at Bombay, where he had devoted himself so disastrously to Miss Mudge.

Angela would be across the docks and on her other boat now, finding her way to a new stateroom. She felt like driving back to see her again, to tell her some of the things that were welling up within him. Better not to see her again, better to see her some time later in England, wait for her life to straighten out. He wished that he could help her over the difficult bit that was coming. She looked so calm when he left her on the boat, the only woman he had ever known who was clever enough to accept a crushing blow without showing her distress.

He did not like being at home. He had nowhere to sit, and even his bookshelves looked unfriendly. He glanced over the titles and came to rest on one of his own books. That made him think of his typewriter, which was still in its dusty corner among his papers, safe from Susanah's cleaning. She did not dare touch his papers. He opened it up and started to type, but his fingers were stiff from lack of practice. There was nothing to write. His mind was a blank. The bloody flatness of everything! His thoughts went round in circles—the boat, Angela, cherry blossoms, the mists of Darjeeling, the elephants at Kandy, Johnny and Patty, Jenny squeezing her way into the China Sea, Joan crushed at the bottom of the tank. Angela, Angela! He covered his face with his hands to ward off the spectres that haunted him now. Macduff was stung at last to suffering; alive as he had never been alive before. This, then, was the way that Angela had felt about Lovat, and Jenny about Rumford, and Joan about Dick. It was easier to understand things now.

In desperation he went to the window and looked out at Gramercy Park, a sight that had often soothed him in years gone by. A long, deep whistle stopped his brooding. That would be Angela's ship sailing at noon. He moved to the door. Too late now! She would be gone. He sank wearily on his ruined chair, and in a blinding flash Macduff knew that there could be no life for him now without Angela.

WELCOME TO FULTON!

Fulton is proud to welcome the competing teams in the Regional Tournament, and also the hundreds of visitors from various communities who will attend the games.

The News, along with Fulton High and the merchants of Fulton, extends a cordial greeting to one and all. We are glad to have you come to Fulton, and hope that you shall come here more often.

It is time for real sportsmanship and goodwill. Competition among the various teams should inculcate a finer feeling of good fellowship and build individual character among the players.

We hope that you enjoy yourselves while here, and believe that new friendships will be made, many of which will last a lifetime.

THE CITY BEAUTIFUL

We have been greatly interested in the efforts of the Woman's Club to make Fulton a cleaner and more beautiful place in which to live. In co-operation with the NYA a project is now underway to clean and improve the general appearance of the business and residential districts.

Now the City Dads have come along and passed an ordinance which is directed toward the purpose of keeping the business area clean. Proprietors of the various business places can help in the program by seeing that their rubbish is placed where the garbage department can remove it, and prevent paper and other inflammable materials from blowing about the streets by having it burned.

It is no easy matter to keep the city clean, but by concentrated efforts on the part of the city council, assisted by the efforts of the Woman's Club, and the co-operation of the citizens, Fulton can be kept looking spic and span. Let us all help with the city beautiful program.

IT SHOULD BE DONE

Fulton, is located as it is, enjoy the trade of farmers residing in portions of five counties—Fulton, Hickman, Graves, Obion and Weakley. Business men are always glad to have them come to Fulton, but right here we suggest that our local hitching grounds need improving. Something should be done about it without delay.

The Jockey Yard back of Lake street is rough and irregular, with sink holes catching water when it rains. The whole lot needs to be leveled and graveled or cindered. And every hitching ground needs a water trough.

Here's a project for the Rotary Club, Lions Club or the Woman's Club. Who is going to do something about it.

A WIDER LAKE STREET

Efforts to widen Lake Street are commendable, and the ardent labors of the committee that has been working on this project should never slacken until the street is laid. The mayor and council could not make a better move, nor push through a more needed improvement for the city, and citizens are anxious and eager to see the project completed.

Widening of Lake Street would enhance the beauty of our downtown business section, and help solve traffic congestion. Don't stop until the job is done, for the general consensus of opinion is that this project is one of the finest launched in recent years.

KENTUCKY FARMER REPORTS PROFITS

A cash gain of $1,041 from his poultry for the period of Oct. 1 to Feb. 1, and a net profit of $1,099.98 for last year, are reported by Grant Maddox, a Boone county farmer.

Maddox gathered 44,365 eggs in the four months from Oct. 1 to Feb. 1. He began the laying year on Oct. 1 with 1,075 hens, but on Feb. 1 had culled the flock to 800. Production for the four months averaged 45 eggs, or more than half of the average yearling production for Kentucky hens.

His flock last year contained 600 Rhode Island Reds, which averaged 78 eggs for the year. In addition to having a profitable poultry flock, Maddox makes money from vegetables and fruit.

Maddox was graduated from the College of Agriculture, University of Kentucky, in 1929, and refused offers of several jobs, including a government position, saying he could be happier and make more money on the farm.

The Littlest Girl's Idea

EVERYONE down to the Littlest Girl in third grade was talking about it.

The town's biggest factory had burned. Many were out of work. Taxes were delinquent. It looked as if the schools couldn't remain open.

The Littlest Girl heard all this because her father was mayor. She heard too that everything would be all right when the railroad's taxes next came due.

She waited until the grown-ups were silent. Then she said: "Daddy, why don't you ask the Illinois Central to pay its taxes now?"

He did ask. And the Illinois Central paid—months in advance.

THERE is said to be no sentiment in business. But the Illinois Central is sometimes able to prove the contrary. In hundreds of communities the taxes it pays are a large part of all local taxes. Roughly 40,000 children go through school at its expense.
