SOIL CONSERVATION

By Herbert Anderson

Twenty to thirty head of whiteface cattle belonging to Roy Boyd, Benton, fattened on fescue, Ladino, and lespedeza pastures through the dry weather.

These pastures remained green and grew while other farmer's pastures were burning to a crisp. The reason for this was that they were located on Clark's River bottom land.

Boyd has used a bul-dozer to clear several more acres of this land. After the brush was cleared off, the bulldozer pulled a weighted plowing disc over the land to prepare the seedbed for grass seeding.

Boyd finished digging a large farm pond, last week, on his farm near Briensburg. A dam two hundred and forty feet long was built across a natural drain. A large gully had washed out in this drain. The pond will stop the erosion in this gully as well as provide water storage. When the pond fills, the water will stand nine feet deep with a water surface of about one-half acre.

The Soil Conservation Service helped in the layout and construction of this pond.

Wilson Henderson, east of Fairdealing, has cleared the trees and bushes from about six acres of idle land with a bulldozer. He plans to get the bulldozer to pull the plowing disc over the land to start the preparation of the seedbed for fall grass seeding.

Henderson said, "This land is not making anything growing these bushes and briars. I want to get it into grass so I can keep more cattle."

The heavy plowing disc pulled by a bulldozer is a good tool for preparing seedbeds economically on land which has been lying idle for a number of years.
Such land is usually covered with a thick wild growth. This heavy growth helps to control erosion and improve the fertility of the soil, when disced into the soil.

The following farmers became cooperators with the Marshall County Soil Conservation District last month: J. B.
Parrott, Clyde Gordon, Ona Mullinax, W. C. Jones, Pete Gardner, O. M. Story, Aaron Barefield, J. K. and Reece Harrison, E. E. Rudolph, Albert Lee, and Orlando Magness.

The assistance these farmers will get from the district is a land capability map and farm plan; technical help on the establishment of all soil and water conservation practices; certain seed and planting stock; and rental of district owned equipment if available.

Reelfoot Lake, near Miller, Ky., was created by a series of earthquakes in 18-11-12. The depression caused by the quake filled with waters from the Mississippi river and formed a lake about 70 square miles in area.
