NOBODY IS INDISPENSABLE

In an interesting article recently Damon Runyon, one of our better modern philosophers, advanced the interesting theory that a case of illness is a pretty good thing for most men. During the period of illness the patient is able to sit on the sidelines and see how well things progress without his services. Then, granting that he finally recovers, he goes back to work with a new appreciation for his helpers and a new humbleness for his own abilities.

Runyon point out that the case of illness roughly corresponds to the procedure followed by a man of his acquaintance when things began to get hot and it seemed that problems of his business could never be solved. At such times this man would order all records and correspondence to be locked up in the safe for a period of one month. Unable to see the records, he was thus unable to do anything about the problems, and after about a month or six weeks all the dire emergencies which had plagued him settled themselves in some manner and nothing else was required.

The writer of letters is another case of the same general type. There is entirely too much letter writing in this country of ours. A busy executive usually has some secretary who will sit at his desk and take dictation and then turn these ideas into fine looking letters. No matter what the man may want, the secretary can translate his thoughts into written words on fine looking letter-heads and all the man need to do is to read the typed letters and then sign them.

If these letters all go to other busy executives who also have secretaries, all well and good. They can reply in the same easy fashion and pretend to be hard working men who keep their desks cleared every eight hours. But when these letters begin to hit the smaller folks who have no secretaries and who must really compose and type the letters, see that they are placed in an envelope and mailed, then a fellow begins to realize that entirely too many letters are written. Many letters, if unanswered, will need no answer after about a week or two, for the answer will finally come to the man who wrote the letter. Many others are so needless and useless that it is a waste of time even reading them, much less writing a reply.

But Runyon did touch, although lightly, on one minor tragedy of life. Although he spoke more or less jestingly, every man does realize at times that he is not greatly needed in this world. In some moment of humility he will look at himself and realize with a sudden shock that if he should suddenly come to the end of things, the work at which he is occupied would go right along without him. Perhaps there might be a few days when it would not do as well, but after that period, other hands and other brains would pick up the work and it would go right along. That also touches a deeper tragedy. Not many men are remembered very long after they have gone, save by those to whom the death brought inner sorrow. Perhaps a few intimate friends may also remember, but after a few months the average life is forgotten by the mass of people as thoroughly as if it had never been lived. That is one of the real tragedies of life, but it only bears out the words which all of us should learn from the scriptures and from a study of history. Some lives may mean more than others, it is true, but measured against the revealing background of eternity, one life really means very little.

TIME AND ELEMENTS TEST ROAD ECONOMY

An extra $1,600,000 for the repair of winter damage, which otherwise might have built more miles of road, is added to the 1940 maintenance budget of the State Highway system. In 1936 the item totaled $2,000,000, an annual average of $7,200,000 for the five-year period almost entirely chargeable to the cheap roads.

Distribution of winter damage by districts leaves no doubt of this. It ranges from $450,000 in the Eighth, where the transition from mud to dustless surface was accomplished without basic change in type, to $9,750 in the Third, where State highways are mostly first class and comparatively new. The Third being Jefferson County, the area is small. County roads may have suffered greater injury. They bear more pounding by heavy traffic of heavy vehicles than many sections of State highways do.

The report of the survey contains an important lesson in economy for impatient laymen who are apt to think engineers consider perfection instead of practical needs. What we skimp in construction is charged up in the final accounting to maintenance; and, if, as mileage lengthens and highways age, maintenance cost increases faster than the road fund, inevitably new construction must be correspondingly curtailed.

"Permanent improvement" is a relative term. Add Louisville's old streets to ravages in the Third District and its damage exceeds that of any other district in the State. Though this is no fault of the City Public Works Department, it proves that money withheld from the upkeep of public property is not saved. On the contrary, the accumulated depreciation is equivalent to a floating debt. —Courier-Journal.

FERTILITY CHECKS TOBACCO DISEASE

The use of manure and commercial fertilizer to increase the resistance of dark tobacco to blackfire, is advocated in a leaflet published by the Kentucky College of Agriculture. Six to ten tons of manure to the acre and a 4-10-6 fertilizer also will increase yield and quality, as well as fortify the tobacco against disease.

The amount of commercial fertilizer to use will vary with the fertility of the soil and the amount of manure used. Phosphate also should be used on phosphate-deficient soil. The method commonly followed in the dark tobacco districts of mixing fertilizers with the soil in making hills, is considered satisfactory for small amounts of fertilizer. Where larger amounts are used, it is suggested that most of it be applied in continuous bands on both sides of the row.

began to spatter in a well worn skillet. I used to sit in that kitchen and practically starve to death while breakfast was being cooked, and I remember the huge fireplace that filled one end of the place. I still remember the man of the house, an old, bearded man, and how he would sit before the fireplace with his pipe. He would deliberately fill and tamp the pipe, and then reach down into the fireplace and pick up a live coal and slowly place it on top of his pipe. I don't know to this day why the coal did not burn his fingers. I only know that he never hurried in the least. He would light his pipe with that live coal and then, without hurry, place the coal back in the fire, and never gave the least impression of hurrying.

Probably Mr. Fordyce never saw a kitchen like that, but that is the memory he gave me when I read of his ideas.

MRS. LON BRENINGER ENTERTAINS COUNCIL

The Women's Council of the First Christian Church was entertained with a covered dish luncheon yesterday at the home of Mrs. Lon Breninger, Eddings street. This was also the regular meeting of the Council.

A delectable luncheon was served at one o'clock and afterwards a regular Missionary program was presented, opened by the chairman, Mrs. G. K. Underwood, who gave a splendid talk on "Love." The devotional was given by Mrs. Ira Little who read the 13th chapter of 1 Corinthians, her topic also being "Love." Mrs. Underwood led in prayer.

The chairman then presided over the business session and reports were made by Mrs. J. P. DeMyer, secretary, and Mrs. B. B. Alexander, treasurer. Mrs. Alexander, who has been ill for some time, was back with the group for the first time since her illness. Members were glad of her return. Various committees were appointed to make arrangements for the birthday party to be given in the basement of the church on Thursday, April 9, the proceeds of which will go for a Christian Church dormitory at a school in Mississippi.

That concluded the business and the remainder of the program was presented. Mrs. Sebra Evans gave a solo, "Give Of Your Best To The Master." Mrs. Jake Huddleston gave a good article entitled "I Know A Christian."

Attending were 21 members and three visitors, Mrs. Ben Evans of Water Valley, Miss., Mrs. Emma Hinman and Dr. Don P. Hawkins.

sided over the usual routine of business. Miss Mignon Wright opened the meeting with prayer.

Mrs. Earl Taylor, president of general W. M. U., was present for the meeting and gave a very helpful talk. Mrs. Russell Rudd, program leader, was then presented and she was assisted by Mrs. Charles Walker and Miss Mary Moss Hales in giving the program. Dismissal prayer was led by Mrs. Sterling Bennett.
