The Olympic Games, planned for Finland this summer, are definitely off. Even after the war with Russia, Finland declared that the International Olympic Committee is financially helpless to arrange the games.

Despite her own suffering Finland might have been able to carry on for a while. Britain's vast resources of a future Europe make the project impossible, and the International Olympic Committee has had to cancel the games definitely and finally.

This, however, will not be the last of Olympic games. In 1940, to look so far ahead as 1944 might be a healthy sign to lose certain pride.

This writer recognized it as such, and it is because those games are not what the world must remember "loyal spirit of sportsmanship" will again be held this summer, and because that oath is not to be taken by the young men and young women, that we have reprinted it above. For though they have been temporarily set aside by a world intent on graver issues, those principles must not be forgotten.

The time will come, some day, when the world must remember "loyal spirit of sportsmanship." The time will come when the world must remember "loyal spirit of sportsmanship."
