Poultry in the New South Central Control Area is showing a marked increase in production over the same period last year. The increase is due to the efforts of the poultry farmers in the area, who have been working hard to increase their production.

The New South Central Control Area covers the counties of: Caldwell, Christian, Edmonson, Simpson, and Warren.

The increase in production has been caused by the use of modern methods of production, such as the use of improved breeds, better feeding and care, and the use of improved housing and feeding facilities.

The poultry farmers in the area are also benefitting from the increased demand for poultry products, which is due to the increased consumption of poultry in the South Central region.

The poultry farmers in the area are now planning to expand their production in the coming season, in order to meet the increased demand for poultry products.

The New South Central Control Area is one of the most productive areas of poultry production in Kentucky, and is expected to continue to increase its production in the coming season.
