Washington—Two paragraphs in language of the most unassailable and explicit kind, as to the new position set forth by the chief executive officer of the government, have inaugurated a political controversy which is already considered by some to be the most important and far-reaching issue of the age. As President Roosevelt declared in his inaugural address, it is the function of his administration to promote the interests of the country and to provide for the welfare of the people. This is the crux of the controversy.

The President in his inaugural address declared that the strongest nation in the world is the nation which has the right ideas, the right leaders, the right institutions, and the right government. And he added that the right leadership must necessarily be the leadership which is free from political domination such as exists in the United States today.

In the past a political party has been associated with the government in the United States, and the idea is that the government is the party. The party controls the government, and the government controls the country. The President has declared that he does not believe in this kind of government, and he adds that the country needs a government that is free from political domination.

The President has declared that he does not believe in the idea that the government is the party, but that the government is the country. He adds that the country needs a government that is free from political domination, and he concludes that the country needs a government that is free from corruption.

"No," Mrs. Greeding told him. "She's going somewhere with Judith." Greeding was an abstemious man, and his wife's open roadster presently turned in from the street, he swung about toward her dressing-room, waiting for her to come up-stairs.

"A cocktail?" Mrs. Greeding turned toward him. She was a lams, fair woman, with hair little too consistantly yellow.

"I've been generous upon a material object, had shattered its doctor stood by the closed door between their rooms, listen-ing.

"Ruth! Ruth!" he cried in a deep exasperation: "Don't you get it? Our daughter's a lady, and it's not practical for her to keep a glass of the cocktail on the table. You'd better throw it away and keep your hands off it!"

Going to the Party?

The party will be held at Mrs. Smith's on Webster street and the dress will be black. The guests will be expected to arrive at the party by 8:00 P.M. Everyone is expected to bring a gift. Mrs. Smith has requested that the gifts be wrapped and labeled with the guest's name and the occasion. The party will last until 12:00 A.M. The menu will consist of hors d'oeuvres, cocktails, and dessert. The hosts will provide a cash bar.
