BRITAIN HAPPY IN ITS SACRIFICE

"Britain today is a happy country. That is the strangest thing that has happened to us in all this strange year." Thus wrote Evelyn A. Montague in her remarkable story in yesterday's Courier-Journal of the rebirth of her country under the guidance of her son, the President of Germany, and the younger generation of the German

The strange thing, however, is that it is not strange. It is history repeating itself. It is the response of a free people to forces that endanger their freedom, the Englishmen answer the call to discipline, work and sacrifice at a moment when the world is fighting for the beloved things of the past.
