British Allowed To Place Order For 12,000 More Planes

Washington--The British Government today announced that the British Government would be permitted to negotiate orders with the Government of the United States for a number of American-built military aircraft.

The announcement was made in a letter to the British Government by the Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Henry Morgenthau, Jr.

"I have received a cable from the British Government," the letter said, "making application for the sale of a considerable number of American-built military aircraft." The letter went on to say that the British Government had been granted permission to purchase American-built aircraft.

The letter also stated that the sale of these aircraft would be subject to the approval of the President of the United States.

The letter concluded with the statement that the sale of these aircraft would be made "in accordance with the principles of the United States foreign policy."

The Irish is Independent

A few days ago, while discussing the submarine menace, Prime Minister Churchill of England remarked that this was almost as serious as the attack from the air. During the past few weeks German submarines have carried the total tonnage destroyed almost to the high mark which was set during the U-boat war. In that period the fate of England was probably in the balance. Fortunately, through lack of support with the help of the United States, the submarine menace was curbed before the British were actually defeated. But now, with leaders still remembering that period and preparing for another attack, there is a feeling that the Irish might be able to make use of it.

Churchill, in his speech, said flatly that as long as Ireland was so weak, she could not be called a free state. From the tone of his voice it is evident that the Irish have finally granted some form of independence to Ireland, and for that fact the Irish may be able to live in peace and safety under the terms of the treaty that was signed last year.

In the face of such a period, it is not likely that the Irish will agree to any terms that would be a threat to their independence. It is certain that the British troops would be more than ready to take action if the Irish should refuse to accept the terms of the treaty.

The Irish will not be alone in this struggle. They will have the support of those who see in the Irish a real strategist, knows this, and it is not likely that the Irish will be able to come out of this struggle with anything less than full independence.

In conclusion, it is evident that the Irish should be given the opportunity to live in peace and safety under their own government. It is certain that the British will not be able to impose any terms that would be a threat to their independence. It is probable that the Irish will be able to live in peace and safety under the terms of the treaty.
