The British power is rising in Near East.

Do women jurors picket to serve?

Women jurors are needed. Total number of juries in the United States is approximately 5,400,000. Of these, only 400,000 are women. The number of women jurors is insufficient, and the United States Supreme Court has ordered states to increase the number of women jurors. The question of whether women should serve as jurors has been raised, and the courts have decided in favor of women. The number of women jurors is important, as it affects the fairness of the justice system.

WITHOUT ENGLAND, THERE CAN BE NO IRELAND

To the man who loves Ireland it is becoming increasingly evident that the differences which have blunted Anglo-Irish relations in the past are nothing beside the menace which threatens both nations today. Much has been suggested that Ireland might be free, but all of that agony has gone for naught unless Ireland can survive.

We are inclined to think, therefore, that many of the Irish-Americans who have mothered and cherished a passionate hatred of all things English must be feeling very much as Michael Griffin, himself a descendant of Irishmen, describes his own attitude on this page today.

Irishmen must know Mr. deValera must know that Ireland's claim to neutrality is purely academic. It exists only because the threat of neutrality is an aid to the Nazi cause. If Irish neutrality should be crushed without a thought, with the same tons of steel in the same creasing treachery, as ended the lives of all of Ireland's companions in the realm of small nations which felt that they had a right to neutrality.

Mr. Griffin's suggestion of a plea from this side is worthy of consideration by those whose concern is for Ireland. The history of Irish freedom has been written in large part through the help and support of Irishmen in the United States. Their united voice would have powerful weight with the man who, so successfully pleaded with them in Ireland in the days when men still had time to argue over the rights and privileges of freedom.—Corriander Journal.

It could dramatize a shoe button. Next time you happen to hear him in the hall try analyzing his remarks and see how much he really depends upon his dramatic voice and little he really says. Or try him on a news broadcast and apply the same test. It might be surprising.

Mr. Knight says that the campaign of 1908 is going to be one of the most exciting in the history of the party. Many of the political commentators, for many of them got into this game last spring, and had the limit cut off behind them. They may not be able to live down all of these things that were said, but Mr. Knight expects to see newspapers running on their extra later than for work which they should do, and work which they could really do better than the syndicate group.

DECLARATION OF INDEPENDENCE

It was somewhat refreshing to find a metropolitan newspaper making what might be called a newspaper declaration of independence. Few newspapers ever do it, for it can be nothing else. John H. Knight, editor of the Free Press of Akron, Ohio, Beacon-Journal, and likewise president of the Detroit Free Press Co., one of the really great newspapers of the nation, is the author of the declaration of independence, and his words are quite timely.

Mr. Knight gives it as his studied opinion that political columnists are now on the way out after having dominated the scene mightily for the past few years. He adds that it is also his belief that newspaper editors will resume the position which they have relinquished to these syndicated columnists for several years and believes that this will result in greater good to more people than has been the case. Occasion of this declaration was a recent editorial in the Detroit Free Press, which belabored newspaper editors as a body for regarding syndicated copy as something holy and sacred, and while journalistic stars that same day still had time to argue over the rights and privileges of freedom.—Corriander Journal.
