The BENIGN BLUNDER

With an aching heart Mrs. Hooker said, "I knew the day would come for you to take me in."

"But you are my best friend," he said.

"I know," she replied, "but I must say, I'm not looking forward to it."

End of story.

Hot Water that stays hot

B EING civilized, you can't live without hot water.

That day is spoiled when for any reason you have needed hot water and it was not available.

Homes where the Clark Electric Water Heaters have been installed never know this most aggravating occurrence.

For the Clark not only heats the water but once heated the water is kept hot. The hundred percent and household uses that call for hot water are simply taken care of by owning this proper sized Clark Electric Water Heater.

Six Outstanding Clark Features

Economy—economically heated water is a Godsend for the homemaker.

Low Standing Costs—there is no fuel, no labor.

Low Operating Costs—there are no fuel or labor costs.

Tap and Hot—you may have a hot, running supply of water at the tap.

No Lime or Scale—there is no lime or scale to clean out.

No Fine or Cold—water is both hot and cold.

An Armory at the Post Office at the Post Office, at the Post Office has been called on to furnish information about farm inventories. Farm agents have printed blanks to be used in taking farm inventories.

"It is businesslike practice to take an inventory every year, as some of the more successful merchants, and a week, and some of the more successful mercantile establishments, make a constant inventory of all farm property at regular intervals," points out Dr. W. R. Manly, head of the farming, county economics department of the College of Agriculture.

A well-furnished store is a necessity today. The number of customers who are called on to furnish information about farm inventories is constantly increasing.

INFLUENZA

That the wave of influenza which started on the western coast sometime ago has reached Kentucky, is well evidenced by the answers to the questionnaire sent out by the County and City Health Officers last week. Off the 120 counties in the state, 63 return estimates. These were based, in part, on interviews with physicians. In 60 of the 63 counties the disease has reached epidemic proportions. For the 60 counties the estimated total infected is approximately 1;1 million. The estimated infected population is probably more than double this number in the state. Census data from influenza may reasonable expect to be edited by 16 months during the coming month. An epidemic of this disease is a given community, usually last its height in about 10 subsequent weeks.

The type of influenza generally prevailing is of a relatively mild character and manifesting little tendency to develop into serious complications.

Colds are being experienced in distinguishing between those mild cases and the common cold, which is now widely prevalent throughout the state. As a general rule, "colds" cause considerable local inflammation of the nose and throat, with "snoring" of the nose, profuse discharge, and discomfort in the head. In the older child, in an

Halif Millon Acres of Legumes in 1928
Kentucky farmers grow approximately a half million acres of legumes, soybeans, sorghum, and alfalfa this year, as is evidenced by the statistics compiled by the Bureau of Cooperative Extension of the University of Kentucky, and by the reports of the Kentucky Board of Agriculture. The state is expected to grow approximately a half a million acres of alfalfa, a million acres of soybeans, and a million acres of sorghum. The greatest development of alfalfa was in the eastern counties, where it is being grown in large quantities for hay. The greatest development of soybeans was in the southern counties, where it is being grown for seed. The greatest development of sorghum was in the eastern counties, where it is being grown for seed and hay. The greatest development of legumes was in the eastern counties, where it is being grown for seed and hay.
