THE CLANCY KIDS — "When You and I Were Young, Maggie"

By PERRY L. GROBY
Governor Chandler, speaking before the legislature, outlined the state's financial situation and discussed the need for educational improvements. He stressed the importance of the state's educational system, particularly at the state colleges. The Governor suggested that the state should support its educational institutions, especially the University of Kentucky, which has recently been recognized for its excellence.

Governor Chandler also addressed the issue of public health, highlighting the importance of addressing the epidemic of tuberculosis in the state. He called for the establishment of better sanitation facilities, particularly in rural areas, to combat the spread of the disease.

In the realm of politics, the Governor discussed the need for a more effective management of state funds. He called for a more transparent and accountable system of state administration, emphasizing the importance of ensuring that public funds are used efficiently and effectively.

Governor Chandler also spoke about the state's economic situation, noting the challenges posed by the recent economic downturn. He called for the implementation of policies that would stimulate economic growth and create jobs for the state's citizens.

In conclusion, Governor Chandler urged the legislature to support his proposals and work together to address the state's pressing issues. He stressed the importance of fostering a spirit of cooperation and unity among the legislators, emphasizing the need for a shared vision for the future of Kentucky.
