GOOD OLD DAYS

By Senator Copper

I can remember when nobody had his "city" time which stretched several minutes from "milwaukee" time.

I can remember when a day's work began at seven and a dollar a day was considered a good salary.

I can remember when from 4 A.M. to 9 P.M. stores opened an hour or two before breakfast and stayed open until it was time to sit down to dinner.

There was no Saturday half day in stores.

I can remember when few people used oil lamps for light and a package of cigarettes cost 25 cents.

I can remember when we had no such thing as "railroad" time.

I can remember when the world was a good world, farmers worked from 4 A.M. to 8 P.M. and the nations of the world will have gone much farther than in the last 50 years.

I can remember the day when newspapers day after day in the morning and afternoon carried the death lists telegraphed from Washington. Jan. 4th, 1865.

I can remember when the boss came down. Only the men who paid their own bills and who were in debt were allowed to work.

I can remember when the name of the purchaser was put on the ring ledgers, no cash sales.

I can remember when the men who worked in the warehouse were known as clerks in stores and offices.

I can remember when newspapers day after day in the morning and afternoon carried the death lists telegraphed from Washington. Jan. 4th, 1865.

I can remember when "yellow fever" season and the drainage of the rice bottoms were necessary.

I can remember when the average family of eight children was clothed, fed and educated on $8.50 a month.

I can remember when the name of the purchaser was put on the ring ledgers, no cash sales.

The Eight Hour Day For Housewives

"A man's work ends here but not his, work.

The Eight Hour Day

By the time the sun was setting in the city of New York on the 1st of April, 1886, the employees of a number of large factories had already set their watch for the next day. It was thought by the owners of these factories that in order to cut expenses they should reduce the working day to 8 hours, thus taking 4 hours off the regular working day. But the employees of these factories did not agree with this idea, as they felt that they were not being paid enough for their work.

They therefore decided to go on strike, and they did so on April 15th, 1886. The strike was a success, and it is now considered the beginning of the modern labor movement.

In 1877, the first Labor Day was observed in New York City, and it is now observed in most parts of the United States.

The Eight Hour Day

The Eight Hour Day is a holiday observed in many countries to mark the beginning of the modern labor movement.

The holiday is celebrated on May 1st every year, and it is observed by many labor organizations.

In 1938, the Fair Labor Standards Act was passed in the United States, which made the 8-hour workday a legal requirement for most workers.

The holiday is celebrated by parades, speeches, and other public events, and it is a reminder of the struggles of working people for fair wages and working conditions.
