WHERE RECONCILIATION CARRIES A THREAT

The reconciliation of Marshal Petain and Pierre Laval is a deadly unification into Napoleon 1852, in which France will necessarily be reoccupied. It is probable that the peace in the Vicinity of the cabinet of Marshal and Foreign Minister and Vice Premier. It is a victory for Otto Abetz, Hitler's spy and foreign agent, who on the request of French managers and writer to the Nazi secretaries and since then has demanded his reinstatement.

There is little doubt that the rugged old Chief of State yielded to Nazi pressure in making up with the man who sought to override him and to cause France to go over completely to the Reich.

There is an unmistakable similarity between Petain's visit on Sunday to occupied France and the visit to Berchtesgaden of Chancellor Schusshig of Austria three years ago. In both instances the heads of cabinets were ordered to make friends with their political enemies who were closely aligned with the Nazis. Petain shakes hands with Laval as Schusshig promised to give up the control of the Austrian police and guerrillas to Tusnay-Inquart. Independent Austria. It will be remembered, survived only a month after the two-hour meeting in Hitler's mountain retreat.

What will follow the Petain-Laval reconciliation can only be estimated if Laval is not restored to power Sunday. His meeting was material, but the government is not interested in a simple exchange of sentiments. If this influence is not to be felt in the Fighting region the negotiations of the last month have been futile as far as Germany is concerned. The obvious purpose of Germany's force diplomacy is to break down the resistance of the aged Field Marshal to the Nazi demands for yet another French fleet and French naval bases at Brest; from within the usual Nazi method.

But Hitler still must reckon with Petain. The old soldier is not without questions of national honor and bravery concern; he remains a heavenly nation is preparing to take a decisive part.

PROTECTION

Means Peace of Mind

Many people foolishly trust to luck that nothing will happen to their homes, to their personal property, or to their automobile. Yet there are dangers which are more than likely to strike any one of us at any time. The question is not whether we shall be struck by misfortune, but when. Protection is the only way to guard against these risks.

Agents Use Movies To Trap Moonshiners

Memphis, Tenn.—Moonshiners in Kentucky and Tennessee have no difficulty being shot out of action periodically by special agents of the Federal Alcohol Tax and Revenue Department.

If a federal agent spots a house that looks suspicious, he can obtain a warrant for search and seizure of the moonshine still. During his investigation, the agent can obtain a sample of the moonshine that will be submitted to a laboratory for analysis.

The agent also has the authority to seize any machinery or equipment used in the production of moonshine, as well as any vehicles or containers used for transportation.

If the agent finds the still in operation, he can seize the equipment and any liquor produced. The liquor is then sent to the laboratory for analysis to determine if it meets the legal requirements for sale.

The investigation often requires a search of the surrounding area for additional stills or evidence of production. The federal agents work closely with local law enforcement agencies to ensure that all illegal activities are thoroughly investigated and prosecuted.
