BRITISH DEMONSTRATES MASTERY OF THE SEA

In what was perhaps the most daring exploit of the war, the British Mediterranean fleet bombarded Genoa, Italy's fourth largest city and important port and shipyard, passed by the great Italian naval base at La Spezia, and hurled shells into Pisa and Leghorn. The city was bombarded by 583 guns and 137 12-inch guns. The battle was a test of the British air force, and the air force was largely in charge. The air force was largely in charge of the British nation, and the air force was largely in charge of the British people. The air force was largely in charge of the British government.
