Home Heating*

The Enterprise Automatic circulating warm air Heater will heat the entire home with a constant circulation of clean, warm air, insuring the same comfortable warmth in every room.

Finished in dark grained Mahogany enamel, it is in harmony with the other furnishings of the most refined taste. The fire door, ash door and all mechanical parts are concealed when the cabinet is closed.

The powerful heating unit makes it most economical in fuel consumption. The wide deep air ways from top to bottom of the cabinet permit free passage of air, which is quickly heated in passing over the heating unit, and out the top to circulate through the entire house.

WORLD WAR VETERAN DEAD OF OLD WOUND

A German bullet, received when the allied troops smashed the Hindenburg line, is believed to have caused the death last Friday night at the U. S. Veterans' hospital, Memphis, of Clarence F. Kines, 41, who was a sergeant in Company K, 119th Infantry, during the World War.

Although it was an allied victory, Sergeant Kines, wounded, was taken a prisoner and remained under guard in a German hospital for 57 days until the armistice was signed and he was released.

After the war Sergeant Kines returned to his home at Obion, Tenn., and later took up employment as a hosting engineer with the Corvle Construction Company, of Clinton, Ky.

The remains were taken to Obion for burial.

Elgin M. Kines, of Fulton, was a brother of the deceased, and attended the funeral.

KENTUCKY KYROCK ROAD IN TENNESSEE IS COM- PLIMENTED

Those who have viewed the new Kyrock constructed road, the Mississippi Valley Highway leading into Greenfield, Tennessee, say it is a fine piece of work. This part of the road is nearing completion and will soon be opened up to traffic and the delight of tourists. Kyrock is a Kentucky product, which is fast growing in favor with those desiring the best type of road construction. When given a 6-inch concrete base, Kyrock is unexcelled for surfacing highway and streets. It has been adopted by some of the largest cities for street improvement work, with excellent satisfaction, especially where a smooth, non-skid surface is desired.

"A Glimpse Into Paradise"

By HELEN R. BARTON

EMMELINE'S fingers and toes had reached the stage where she wouldn't have noticed the prince of Wales had he suddenly appeared before her. But, as a matter of fact, the young man who finally pushed open the door to the doctor's study that icy, wind-swept January day, was about as remotely different from the celebrated perfection of manhood as Ethel Barrymore is from a Zulu princess.

There were a few coats in the open grate, and Emmeline had flung her snowshoes into the hall and had crouched over the fire, striving to ease the painful numbness that had driven her from her snowshoeing. Eventually she had become aware that her feet were pulling her. So, with little success, she had tried to force her numb fingers to the task of unfastening the lead rawhide laces of her high boots.

"I say, let me help you, won't you? You seem to be having a whole of a time with those knots." And the young man stooped and unfastened the boot laces, removed the boots, and then, with business-like efficiency, advised her to get some warm water and try soaking her hands and rubbing them with a rough towel. Gratefully, Emmeline went to do his bidding. Ten minutes later, her father being absent, she went back to his office to chat with the strange young man until the doctor should return from his call. To her utter amazement, she discovered the young man there in a dead faint.

Emmy's knees shook as she went about the soft business of restoring the young man. The scars on his cheek and forehead told of either a war injury or some other accident or injury, perhaps causing the faint powdering of gray hairs at the temple, while the rest of his hair was raven black.

He stirred at last and smiled weakly up at her. Emmeline flashed him a warmly friendly smile and said softly: "You mustn't try to get up; you don't want me to leave all that to go through again, do you? You scared me nearly out of my wits!"

Suddenly the young man turned his gaze toward the fire as he said a flood: "So many of my pals have felt out of the way, since the war finished things for some of us that I'm just another square peg, I suppose! And you simply couldn't understand how it hurts to feel that one is a burden!"

"Who?" demanded Emmy fiercely. "Never made you feel so non-sensical, did the name, please?" "Just one chance to tell about a kind of strychnine he prefers, that's all." And Emmy's soft, blue eyes flashed such wrath and fire that Link Schofield smiled back at her in a most disarming, little-boy sort of way. They were in the midst of Link's war experiences when Doctor Kingsbury returned and Emmy departed hastily at her father's unmistakable "high sign."

She thought often of Link in the days that followed, but he did not come again, and Emmeline finally decided that he hadn't cared about what she had said, or how she had looked—to drop into her life so casually and so easily drop out again. So she thought that she had hardened her heart against him, and she occupied herself with her flowers, her garden, her nurse and whatever came her way as the long days drifted by.

Then, one day, Emmy happened to look up from her gardening (she was transplanting pansies), and there he was staring at her over the garden wall. And as quickly as she had looked up, he was gone down the street. For a blank moment she gazed after him, and then, casting discretion to the far winds, she sprinted after him very much like a schoolgirl, catching up with him, she said: "Do you mean to say you'd go right by my house without even speaking to me? You ought to be ashamed!" Propelled by her eager hands he was soon back inside the garden, sitting on a shabby old bench, watching her working in the warm, moist earth.

Of a sudden a thought struck Emmeline. Turning swiftly, she looked straight into Link's troubled eyes and said: "Have you been here before?" Startled, he flushed painfully and said: "Yes—sometimes."

"Then—you came by on the hope of seeing me—Link?" she persisted gently.

"Yes," he confessed, "it was like a glimpse into Paradise!" He looked off beyond the distant horizon as though to find succor for the pain in his eyes.

"But, Link—" she protested. "Can't you see," he grated harshly, "that nothing like that is for me? That I might have lived to ninety, but might not finish out five years more?"

"But those five years?" she persisted unhappily, "wouldn't they be worth it?"

"It wouldn't be fair to you," he said gravely, "even if you could care for such a wreck."

"Ah, Link," she cried, "only those who dare to push the door open ever get into Paradise; the rest stand outside, peering in! Don't make me open the door for you!"

With a muttered exclamation, he authorized her tenderly into his hungry arms, scarcely daring to believe his happiness.
