English City Is Gassed In Mock Attack To Warn Coming Dangers

Burlington, England — The first of a series of attacks to be staged throughout England began here today when police presented a mock gas attack at a school to demonstrate to parents and teachers the precautions to be taken.

The attack was simulated according to the closest possible imitation of the recent gas attack in which deadly chlorine gas was used against civilians in Gascoigne, England.

The school where the demonstration was staged is one of the biggest social affairs of the day's work. It started at 7:30 a.m. and ended at 8:30 a.m.

Mrs. J. A. Latta is improving at the Fulton Hospital.

When Congress, on the recommendation of both rural and urban political leaders, entered the bill last autumn which was finally passed, a two-year hold-up, 20 million acres of what is known as the "bottomland hardwoods" was marked for immediate leasing.

The bill was passed by Congress and signed by President Roosevelt. It authorized the leasing of 20 million acres of bottomland hardwoods for five years, with a possible extension of five years. The land is situated in the lower Mississippi Valley, mainly in the states of Arkansas, Louisiana, Mississippi, and Alabama.

The leasing of the land is expected to provide a source of revenue for the federal government and to encourage the development of the area. The land is suitable for forest growth and is believed to be capable of producing large quantities of timber, as well as other forest products.

The leasing agreement provides that the leased acreage shall be used for the purpose of foresting and reforestation, and that the lessee shall be required to maintain and preserve the land in a forested condition for a period of not less than 25 years.

The leasing agreement also provides for the payment of a rental to the federal government, with the amount of the rental to be determined by the Secretary of the Interior, in consultation with the Bureau of Reclamation and the Forest Service.
