SPRING CARNIVAL OPENED LAST EVENING very satisfactorily

The Comstockian people carry many attractions with them.

The roar of the lions and the growls of the tigers and the screams of the monkeys filled the air last night, as showmen drove their attractions around the grounds, calling upon the public to come and see the wonderful animals of the sideshow, which is scheduled to go into effect tomorrow. The carpenters and join -

First Ward—White, 235 males, 282 females, total 517; colored, 77 males, 80 females, total 157; grand total, 674.

Fifth Ward—White, 472 males, 377 females, total 849; colored, 112 males, 115 females, total 227; grand total, 1076.

Fourth Ward—White, 454 males, 407 females, total 861; colored, 125 males, 122 females, total 247; grand total, 1108.

One additional step forward was taken toward the final decision yesterday when it was revealed that the Unionists want the contractors to put 4.80 per cent upward in the scale of wages they are paying them. The carpenters and contractors are in a deadlock on the question of the amount they should pay, but a conference was held yesterday to try to settle the matter, and it was decided that the carpenters would go to work tomorrow.

The campaign of this city cannot afford to pay the poorest men, and it is necessary for the contractors to give the men better wages in order to keep them working. The carpenters will not return to work until the difficulty is settled.

There is a great amount of building going on in this city, and if the men are not paid a fair wage, the whole building operation in the region will come to a standstill. It has been estimated that the city will probably go out on a strike tomorrow.

COCKTAIL AT THREE Forks

Ring the Curse of Spain

There is always a division and a cleavage in the mind of man, and one which he either accepts or rejects in his action. The division is between the practical and the ideal, the practical being the more common, and the ideal the more elevated. The man who accepts the ideal is the poet, and the man who rejects it is the mechanist. The poet is the one who creates, and the mechanist is the one who destroys. The poet is the one who lives in the world of dreams, and the mechanist is the one who lives in the world of reality.

J. P. RING

Dunlop Stable, 51 West 55th Street.

I was standing in the barroom in a thought—"Well, "I said to myself, "what shall I do? Shall I go to the dance, or stay home and read a book?" I decided to go to the dance, and I went.

The barroom was crowded, and there were many people there. I saw a girl whom I had never seen before, and she was very pretty. I went up to her and said, "My name is J. P. Ring, and I am a poet. May I have the privilege of knowing you?"

She replied, "My name is Miss Smith, and I am a Mechanist. I am not interested in poetry."

I was disappointed, but I said, "Well, Miss Smith, I understand. I will not trouble you any further."

But as I walked out of the barroom, I saw her looking at me through the window, and I thought, "Perhaps she is not so bad after all."

Rapid Growth of Antlers

There were two boys who were playing football on the school playground. One of them had a large antler on his head, and the other had a small one. The boy with the large antler said to his friend, "Look at me! I have got a big antler on my head!"

The other boy said, "Yes, but I have a small antler on my head."

The boy with the large antler said, "That is nothing. I have got a whole antler on my head, and you have only got a little one."

The other boy said, "That is not true. My antler is just as good as yours."

They argued for a long time, but they could not agree. Finally, the boy with the large antler said, "Well, we will have to agree to disagree."

They shook hands, and they went back to playing football.

NATIONALITY ESTABLISHED.

"These" War Days Sketches by "Herald" and "toList" Kirkham.

There might be room for a variation in the idea of nationality. The idea of nationality is one that is based on the idea of a common language, a common culture, and a common history. But there might be room for a variation in this idea, and it might be that nationality is something more than just these things.

There are many people who have different languages, cultures, and histories, and yet they still consider themselves to be members of the same nationality. This is because they share a common idea, or a common belief.

The idea of a common belief is something that is very important. It is something that is not just based on the idea of a common language, or a common culture, or a common history. It is something that is based on the idea of a common idea, or a common belief.

This is why it is possible for people to be members of the same nationality, even if they have different languages, cultures, and histories. It is because they share a common idea, or a common belief.
