What City-Owned Electric Plants in Kentucky Charge For Service

It is regrettable that Mayor DeMyer finds it necessary to go to Tennessee to get examples of supposedly successful city-owned electric plants. Why not tell about Kentucky's municipally owned systems? Tennessee and Kentucky laws covering operation of electric plants are different. An electric system in Fulton must operate under Kentucky laws.

Sponsors of the proposed Fulton municipal electric plant claim it will provide very cheap service here. So that you may know the facts, we submit below a comparison of Fulton's present electric rates with the average rates—measured in kilowatt-hours (KWH)—in the nine Kentucky cities which have operated municipal plants for years.

Three of the cities are Bardstown, Corbin, and Florence. A fourth is Petersburg, Madisonville, Henderson, and Paducah, which has a population of 17,400. All figures are from the latest Federal Power Commission report.

Here you can see what the electric service rates will be under municipal ownership of Fulton's electric system.

None of the municipal plants pay city or county taxes and their operation has not wiped out city taxes. Fulton gets yearly from the Kentucky Utilities Company an average of $250,000 in taxes, payrolls, and purchases, and the county gets around $2,100 in taxes from the company.

Mayor DeMyer says the proposed $110,000 electric plant bond issue would bring T. V. A. power to Fulton. Fulton's Mayor DeMyer and members of the council if they haven't been told by T. V. A. officials that T. V. A. power was not available for Fulton.

As a taxpayer (direct or indirect) and electricity user, you will save money now and in the future by voting NO on the bond issue.

EARLY SETTLERS HERE HAD MANY TRIALS

The first appearance of white men in this section dates from the 16th century, when the Jesuit missionaries, Father Le Mers, left the city of Quebec, and crossed the river in small boats. On the north side of the river he met the Hurons, a friendly people who lived near the lakes, erecting forts at various points on the river to protect the missionaries from the Iroquois, who lived near that point, and were on the warpath during the winter months. Father Le Mers was a true Jesuit missionary and a strong position near that point, and erected forts at various points on the river to protect the missionaries from the Iroquois, who lived near that point, and were on the warpath during the winter months.

The Jesuit fathers were followed by the missionaries of the Sulpicians, who established missions along the river in the 17th century. These missions were the forerunners of the French settlements, which later became the American colonies. The first permanent settlement in this area was established by the French in 1682, when the Sieur de La Salle, a French explorer, founded a trading post near the mouth of the river. This post was the forerunner of New Orleans, which was founded in 1718.

In the 18th century, the French established several other settlements along the river, including Natchez, Baton Rouge, and Mobile. These settlements were the forerunners of the American states of Mississippi, Louisiana, and Alabama, respectively.

In the 19th century, the river was an important trade route for the transportation of goods and people. Steamboats were the main mode of transportation, and the river was lined with warehouses, saloons, and gambling dens. The river was also a source of water for the growing cities along its banks. The river was also a source of water for the growing cities along its banks.

In the 20th century, the river became an important source of hydroelectric power, with the construction of dams and power stations along its course. The river also became a source of recreation for the millions of tourists who visit the area each year.

The river has played an important role in the history of the United States, and its importance is likely to continue for many years to come. The river is a symbol of the American frontier, and its history is a testament to the resilience and ingenuity of the people who have lived along its banks.
