Washington.—Water pollution is one of the major problems that must be solved in the development of the Ohio Valley region.

"Pollution is the region has definite obligations not only to other industries but to the public," Dr. John Brown, who visited the region for the purpose of sampling and seeing what was being done by industries, told the board. "It is amazing to see what has been done by industries to prevent pollution in that area."

Several days after Mr. Brown's visit, the community was asked to adopt a plan to prevent pollution in the region.

"It is very important that these industries be made aware of the pollution problems in the area," Dr. Brown said. "We have set up a plan to educate these industries on the importance of preventing pollution in the area.

"The plan will include seminars, workshops, and special training programs for workers in the region."

The plan will be implemented in cooperation with the National Resources Planning Board and other federal agencies.

"We believe that we can make a difference in the prevention of pollution in the region," Dr. Brown said.

"It is important for everyone to be aware of the pollution problems in the area and to do their part to prevent pollution."
