Its primary aims are to ensure the availability of essential drugs, to promote international health cooperation, and to advance health and welfare through research and education. The organization has 194 member states and operates under the aegis of the United Nations System.

With the World Health Organization's 75th anniversary coming up, it's a good time to reflect on the organization's role in shaping global health policies and strategies. The World Health Organization (WHO) is the leading international body for public health. Founded in 1948, it is a specialized agency of the United Nations with a mandate to act as the world's authority on health with a focus on international cooperation and public health interventions.

The WHO's work encompasses a wide range of areas, from disease control and prevention to health policy and systems development. Its efforts have contributed to the eradication of smallpox and polio, the reduction of maternal and child mortality, and the expansion of universal health coverage. The organization's work is guided by the Declaration of Alma Ata, which declared health a fundamental human right and called for a focus on primary health care.

The WHO's work is funded through voluntary contributions from member states, and it engages in partnerships with other international organizations, governments, and civil society organizations to achieve its goals. The organization is led by its Director-General, who is appointed by the member states and serves a five-year term.

The WHO's role in the COVID-19 pandemic has been significant, providing guidance to countries around the world on preventing the spread of the virus and supporting vaccine distribution. The organization's work continues to play a crucial role in shaping global health policies and strategies, and its leadership remains committed to addressing the world's health challenges.

Engineering as Profession
By Fred Lee Wilkenson
West, Applied Scientific School A modern human being must be a master in many spheres. Only by this advancement can one become a professional man. Engineering provides the answer. On entering the University of Louisville, the student finds a combination of technical knowledge, broad learning, practical experience and personal development as requirements in this field.

A generally accepted definition of engineering is the skill to ap-rroach any problem, to think through it, to secure the appropriate resources and to solve it.

In engineering, the student is required to think ahead and determine the practical aspects of the problem.

This is a challenge and an important one. Engineering is not just a job, but a way of life.

A university education in engineering provides a solid foundain the sciences which can serve as the basis for further development in any direction.

The vocational education program of the University of Louisville provides a course in engineering for the student who wants to enter that field.

In the engineering department students are taught the fundamental principles of their vocation. They are given a knowledge of the science of engineering.

Moral Rearmament

By Dr. Percy N. G. Duthie

The world's condition cannot but produce disquiet and anxiety. The great big problem of international danger is evident. The attitude of the great powers divides the world into opposing camps. This is fundamentally unreasonable. The world is not divided into two hostile camps.

The crisis is fundamentally unreasonable. The situation must be improved. But this takes time and effort. The time is now for moral rearmament.

The rise of nationalism and the great camps are undermining social security. The rise of nationalism and the great camps are undermining social security.

The world's condition cannot but produce disquiet and anxiety. The attitude of the great powers divides the world into opposing camps.

Moral Rearmament is essentially the return to a true Christian spirit. It is the discovery of the Gospel in the world today. It is the rediscovery of Christian principles and ideas.

Under the present system, a special purpose is to supply a need that is not met by today's society. It is to provide a moral and spiritual foundation for the world.

The rise of nationalism and the great camps is undermining social security. The situation must be improved. But this takes time and effort. The time is now for moral rearmament.
