THE LISTENING POST

● This Preacher Hartman has played an unkind prank on me, and the chances are pretty good that he has just about ruined a first class irregular attendant at his Methodist Church. What his motives may have been I have no idea, but from the way he grinned when he told me about the matter I judge that he must have had some deep and well laid plans. I have not yet seen the result of his nefarious work—this being written on Saturday—but next week I will know what he has really done and can plan something in rebuttal I may have to take the matter up with Smith Atkins, who is the Preacher's boss, and I stand in with Smith pretty well and may get some effective aid. Anyhow, I do not intend to take the matter lying down. I am going to move in on the Preacher and use all the power I may happen to have.

● For be it known to all and sundry, I am a back seat man. Wherever I go to public meetings I have an instinctive yearning for the back seat. At the picture show, if I happen to find all the back seats taken, the show is ruined for me. I must have a phobia for not liking to have people behind me. Whether this is because of an uneasy conscience, whether I fear having people behind me, I do not know. Perhaps it all stems from much reading of western fiction, where the main guy always enters a crowded place and takes a seat with his back against a wall. No matter what the cause I like the back seat at every place except a baseball game. At these I rather like a middle seat. The back seats at a baseball game are usually rather high and this distorts my judgment of fly balls and umpire's decisions. As I always play the game for players and umpires alike, I like to be in a position where I can give them unbiased assistance.

● At church services I also like the back seat. For years, on the occasions when I attended church services, I have always made for the back seat, and here I find most comfort and satisfaction. There is a sort of feeling of unworthiness in church, I think, which causes this back seat phobia. I really do not feel that I am the sort who should take a front seat in church — although heaven knows, I need a lot of front seat work. In fact, the mourner's bench should be my regular seat, but the fact remains that I have been a back seat attendant for many years.

● More or less regularly I have been hearing Preacher Hartman from the back seat of the Methodist Church. Now a back seat should not be any burden on this Preacher, for he has such a voice as I imagine John the Baptist had when he traveled through the land preaching in the wilderness. He can really keep a man awake even on the back seat and I thought everything was quite all right with him I knew I was satisfied and presumed he was.

● However, there must have been a purposeful look in his eyes for the last few Sunday nights. I had an idea he was eyeing me, but I could not figure out the reason. I just kept on going and sitting on the rear seat. The other day he came in the office, and this was the first time I had seen him outside of his pulpit in weeks, and gave me some items for publication. In the conversation that followed he kept smiling to himself and finally he told me the joke. "You know," he grinned, "we played quite a joke on you at the church today. We took out the back seat."

● Of course, if he took out the back seat it must leave another back seat, but I can hardly wait to see what this husky preacher has done.

400 Women Of Eight Counties Hold Annual Meeting Here Saturday

Four hundred Homemakers of the eighth Kentucky counties West of the Tennessee river gathered here Saturday for the annual meeting of the Purchase District of the Kentucky Federation of Homemakers. "Guide Posts to the Future," was the theme for the meeting, which was held in Science Hall at Fulton high school. The first session was called to order at 10 o'clock, and the meeting continued through a recreational period beginning at 2 o'clock.

Principal speakers on the program were Mrs. P. W. Adkins, of Insull, Bell county, president of the Kentucky Federation of Homemakers and Miss Ella Gardner, Washington, D. C., recreation specialist of the United States Department of Agriculture.

Talks also were made by the following:

Joe Beadles Ends Brilliant Athletic Career

Ablene, Tex. Joe Beadles, Jr., son of Mr. and Mrs. Joe Beadles of Fulton, Kentucky, concluded a brilliant athletic career at Ablene Christian college last week with an outstanding showing at the Drake Relays as anchor man on two of the college's relay teams which placed in the meet.

Beadles brought the baton in a yard behind the first place man in the two-mile relay making the team's time 7:53.1 and was only two yards behind the winner in the sprint medley for a third.

In the spring medley Beadles ran his half mile stretch in the very unusual time of 1:51.3 which is one of the fastest half miles run in the entire nation this year. He has run the event under 1:54 several times this season.

Beadles has been president of his class for four years and will be awarded his bachelor's degree May 26. He plans to take up teaching and coaching as a life profession.

In addition to track, Beadles played regularly in the backfield on the Wildcat football team which for the past two seasons has tied for the Texas conference title. He is one of the most outstanding athletes in the college's recent history.

Cub Scouting To Be Started In Fulton Soon

Another attempt is being made by Boy Scout council members here to organize Cub scouting in Fulton. It will be remembered that about two years ago this attempt was first made and progress was made until the selection of a scoutmaster arose and none could be found. But now Charles Gregory has promised to act as Cub scoutmaster and the group will be organized.

Tomorrow afternoon at four o'clock Mr. Seamon, from the Cincinnati Regional Office and head of the cubbing program in this district, will be at the Woman's Club building for the purpose of thoroughly explaining Cub Scouting to all parents and boys 9, 10 and 11 years of age. (Just before the regular scouting age.) All mothers are especially urged to attend this gathering since mothers of the boys play an important part in the progress of cubbing. Fathers also are urged to attend.

It is hoped that a large crowd will attend the meeting and that this group can be organized in the very near future.

A. P. Correspondents Undergo Many Hardships Covering War

Gunfire and bomb-blasts harassed the movement of The Associated Press staff in the Balkans to new strategic positions for the news coverage of subsequent developments and one AP staff correspondent was wounded slightly in the leg by machine-gun fire.

The wounded man, Robert St. John, arrived in Cairo after an adventurous journey on which he set out from the Dalmatian coast of Yugoslavia on April 16 with fellow correspondents in a rowboat powered by a small outboard motor.

Reporting his arrival in Cairo was Edward Kennedy of The Associated Press who himself had just escaped from Greece and was in the midst of writing a thriller on his own experiences of withdrawal down the length of Greece with the defeated British imperial forces. Kennedy got away from the Athens port of Piraeus in a Greek vessel, escaped the bombing that left the harbor a mass of wreckage, and reached Cairo by way of Crete.

About the time Kennedy was pausing in his eye-witness account to report the arrival of St. John and arrange for his medical attention, the AP's Max Harrelson reached Budapest, telephoned the AP office in Bern, Switzerland, and said—"Well, I'm back from the dead."

Harrelson had been in Zagreb, Croatia, for three weeks, witnessing the detachment of that state from Yugoslavia and its new set-up as an axis domain. He was the only foreign correspondent on the spot.

The first AP man to get away from crumbling Greece with the uncensored story of its imminent downfall was Daniel DeLuca, who crossed the Aegean before the fall of Athens and from Smyrna, Turkey, foretold the plans of King George II and his government to withdraw the seat of government.

Next out of Greece was J. Reilly O'Sullivan, veteran AP man and an officer in the U. S. air service in the last great war. He crossed to Turkey in a fishing boat and told his story of bombings en route. Left in Athens was J. Wes Gallagher, who flashed the German entry into the ancient capital and then went silent. He hasn't been heard from since Athens was occupied last Sunday morning but apparently is safe.

It's A Complicated System, But The Income Angle Seeks All Right

Richmond, Va.—A scientific plan to pay $5 to $10 a month to every adult American, rich and poor alike, was proposed to the Virginia Academy of science today. The object is to end depressions. The proposal was made by Allen T. Gwathmey research associate, University of Virginia.

The exact amount would fluctuate, under his plan, but he said it would probably average the sums named. This money would represent the difference in value between the nation's total production in a year, and the amount of goods bought in the same period.

Example Given
For example, he explained, total production in a year, or in a fixed period might equal ten billion dollars; consumption eight billion. For that period two billion dollars would be distributed.

This extra money would be issued by the government, and Gwathmey had an explanation to show why it would not cause neither inflation nor disruption of business.

Science, he said, has now reached the point where it can, and does produce more than the people can buy each year. The people cannot buy because of an outdated financial system.

Gwathmey also argued there would be no inflation, for the money would be created only when there are new goods to match it.

The plan, he declared, would preserve the profit motive and private ownership of property and most of the relief and forced charity would be eliminated.

War taxes, too, would be fixed by this system. They would be the excess in purchasing power derived from war industry goods. War materials would not rate as ordinary consumable goods.

Employees May Have To Pay For Out-State Trips

Meredith's Suits Are Aimed At Officials Authorizing Travel

Frankfort, Ky.—Sparring by attorneys in the out-state travel suit this week developed a possibility that officials and employees who made the trips may have to pay for them.

Attorney General Hubert Meredith's suit to recover $45,792 spent during the four fiscal years ended last June in travel to various conventions and conferences was directed against the three state officials who authorized the trips.

Meredith listed 93 such expense vouchers, involving some 300 persons, many of them comparatively minor officials and workers and sought to hold State Finance Commissioner J. Dan Talbot, Finance Controller Frank D. Peterson, and Treasurer Ernest E. Shannon, along with their official bondsmen, responsible.

In refusing to accept certain stipulations presented by the attorney general and designed to reduce the tremendous volume of evidence, Clifford E. Smith said he could not agree that Meredith's petition contained all the data on each of the trips. He added that to do so would be failing to "protect the employees" involved.

Later Smith explained informally that he believed that section 4701 of the Kentucky statutes would require the state to deduct from the pay of the employees the cost of any of their trips which the courts might rule were illegal.

The attorney general's office was loath to accept that statute as covering the case, but Meredith commented that if it did, it would be "tough on those whose travel expenses were authorized by their superiors."

Farmed Out Husband Demands Wife Pay Him Half Of Earnings

Los Angeles — Samuel Brummel, 56-year-old insurance salesman who contends his wife rented him to another woman for a year, demands half the $10,000 Mrs. Brummel said she received.

Seeking a divorce from Mrs. Lillian Patton Brummel, whom he married in San Francisco in 1911, Brummel alleges that although he returned to her at the end of the year, she deserted him without splitting the fee as promised. He is suing for half as community property.

Mrs. Norman Peppin, middle-aged county employe, tearfully acknowledged in court that she paid the sum to Mrs. Brummel, but declined to say what it was "to compensate" her for the loss of her husband's affections.

Obtains Divorce

Mrs. Brummel obtained a divorce in Tijuana, Mexico, July 1, 1938, court records show, and the following August 5, Brummel married Mrs. Peppin in Fresno, Calif. They separated a year and 10 days later and last August Peppin obtained an annulment on the ground Brummel already was married at

Administration Won't Oppose Convoy Vote

Barkley Says Amendment Will Be Beaten In Senate

Washington — Administration leaders indicated Sunday that they would not oppose a showdown in the Senate on the proposal of Senator Tobey (R-N. H.) to put Congress on record against using the Navy to convoy shipments to Britain.

Although opponents succeeded in smothering Tobey's resolution in the Foreign Relations Committee last week, Democratic Leader Barkley of Kentucky said that if the New Hampshire Senator offered it as an amendment to other legislation—as Tobey has said he would do—no attempt would be made to curtail debate or prevent the bill coming to a vote.

Vote Expected Tuesday

"It will just come up and we will vote it down," Barkley told reporters.

Tobey proposed to offer his resolution as an amendment to legislation which would authorize the President to seize all idle foreign ships in American waters.

This measure is to come up in the House Monday and a vote is expected Tuesday. It appeared doubtful, however, that the legislation would be brought up in the Senate this week.

THE ISSUE IS VITAL IN IRAQ CONTROVERSY

There is far more than the matter of oil involved in the highly explosive controversy between Great Britain and the Iraq Government, though oil from the great Mosul fields provides the motive power for the British Mediterranean fleet and is the object of German rapacity. The whole of the Near East, probably the next theater of war, is affected and on the issue probably hangs the fate of the Suez Canal.

The attitude of Turkey in large measure depends on the outcome of the British-Iraq dispute. If the pro-Axis government at Bagdad wins out, the Turks will be caught between two fires, Germany demanding transit rights through its territory and Iraq backing up such demands. Under such circumstances French Syria will open its doors to the German war machine, regarding the British as unable to put up opposition. Likewise the whole Arab world might be affected as the result of the carefully planted propaganda of German invincibility and the hold on Suez would be untenable.

But Britain is not likely to relinquish its rights in the Middle Eastern kingdom. Iraq owes its existence as a separate State to Great Britain. Following World War I it was carved out of Turkey and placed under a British mandate. Under existing treaties the country enjoys an independence status similar to that of Egypt, but its chief defense is entrusted to a British air force and to a small native army trained by British soldiers.

The controversy that now ranges is for control of the air fields. The native army stands guard over the air base near Bagdad and reinforced British troops demand that it be restored to them. The pro-Axis Iraq government, which came into power last month as the result of a coup d'etat, stole a march on the British who normally maintain only two battalions of Indian troops in the country counting on the air force to protect their interests.

In the present impasse one side or the other must give away and Britain has too much to lose to become at this critical hour the victim of Nazi intrigue and Arab cunning.—Courier-Journal

REBUILDING THE HOME TOWN

Destruction by fire of some 550 homes in Marshfield, Mass., can be turned into a splendid opportunity for civic progress, as the experience of other communities illustrates.

Not so long ago the long arm of Uncle Sam stretched out to build a flood-control dam across the Pemigewasset River in New Hampshire. The village of Hill thus seemed destined to become nothing but a watery ripple in the sunlight.

The community's main industry had closed and its railroad had been washed away. Condemnation of the town itself now seemed a heavy blow. But the residents determined to build a new Hill, a model village, on higher ground. They worked out their differences. Then they called in state planning engineers.

The new village is a reality today, with neat little homes and pretty streets. Even to details it is well planned. Conduits, for example, are laid under the grass strip separating street and sidewalk, where no pavement will have to be torn up for repairs. The village is a paying project.

Other communities, too, have faced

Mrs. Kate Twigg died last night after a long illness, at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Will Beard, on Carr St. The Senior Play "Green Stockings" will be staged on the night of May 12 in the high school auditorium.

Practically all utilities are closed tightly in Great Britain today as the general strike of all labor takes firm hold. William Cohn is reported slightly better today at his home on Carr street.

Mrs. J. N. McNeilly is reported improving from a recent illness at her home on ackson street.

Mr. and Mrs. Searcy Callahan have returned to their home in Lakeland, Fla., after visiting relatives here.

disaster and risen to overcome. Columbus, Ky., on the Mississippi and Shawneetown, Ill., on the Ohio both rebuilt, are examples.

The vigor of Marshfield is shown by the fact that a committee is already at work planning reconstruction. Organized effort and careful, thorough planning can make the Ocean Bluffs district an unsurpassed model seaside resort. The example is one which other stricken communities might well follow.—Exchange.

AMERICAN PLANES BETTER

A German Messerschmitt fighter plane shot down—presumably—in England landed in such condition that all vital parts were intact, and was immediately shipped to the United States for examination by aviation plant engineers. The result is of course interesting.

The ship, a two-engine model, was dissected at the Vultee plant in California and was found to be better than expected, but not as good as the machines of comparable type currently being turned out by American factories. It was particularly lacking in protection for pilots, which may explain at least to some extent, why British airmen shoot down so many more German fighters than they lose themselves.

While there is no radical difference in design as compared to American planes, close scrutiny by Vultee engineers has disclosed what they believe are some points in which the German design speeds mass production. Parts are more interchangeable than in American planes, a disadvantage of their product which British and American manufacturers are now rapidly eliminating.

The Messerschmitt has a range of five or six hours and a top speed of 375 miles per hour. The model examined was equipped with a fine set of instruments, a substantial radio set, five machine guns and two cannon.

The conclusion appears to be inescapable that Germans vaunted superiority in the air is due not to superiority of equipment of personnel, because such superiority does not exist, but entirely to application of mass manufacturing methods which America and Britain have not been able to duplicate to date.—Exchange.

DEFECTIVE SOIL HURT FRUIT TREES

When fruit trees fail to develop properly and when the leaves are puny and yellow, the soil probably lacks sufficient nitrogen and phosphorus. So Prof. C. S. Waltman, found in tests at the Kentucky Agricultural Experiment Station. Peach and apple trees set in defective soils didn't make much growth, and the trees were slender and yellowish-green in color instead of deep-green. Lack of a proper supply of nitrogen and phosphorus also may have something to do with fruit production. Prof. Waltman's experiments are reported in Bulletin No. 410.

Family Of Five Missing 8 Years Found Drowned

Springfield, Mass.—A ten-year search that extended across the Nation ended yesterday within a few feet of where it began when the skeletons of David Lee, former actor, his wife and three children were found in an automobile on the bed of a small pond.

Workmen draining Water Shop Pond preparatory to constructing a bridge connecting two plants of the Springfield Armory, discovered the skeletons of the couple and the children—Genelia, 8, Louis, 6, and David, Jr., 4—who disappeared shortly before Christmas, 1930.

Police had circled the country in an effort to locate the family, reported missing after attending a party at the home of a neighbor.

Fishing In Puddle In Worn-Out Street Brings Repairs

Sylvester, Ga.—Tired of seeing the puddle in Kelley St. near his gasoline station E. J. Ford quietly got down his tackle and solemnly went to fishing in the middle of the street.

Sure enough, this irked G. S. Nelms, city superintendent of streets, and he tried to have Ford arrested for fishing out of season. It didn't work.

Nelms insisted he wasn't being pushed into anything by Ford's angling but a crew appeared and filled in the fishing pond.

Ford retired smiling—but said he would keep his tackle handy in case it's needed next spring.

BOBBY JONES' YOUNG SON TO COMPETE IN FIRST TOURNEY

CHATTANOOGA, TENN.—

Bobby Jones, 3rd made his bow to competitive golf today with Robert Tyre Jones, Jr., hoping he would be accepted as a 14-year-old youngster out for the fun with no idea of a tournament golf career.

"I do not want to see him become a tournament golfer," said the father who retired in 1930 without new golfing worlds to conquer.

"I hope he becomes good enough to get a lot of pleasure out of the game."

"Little Bobby," a student at Marist College in Atlanta, was among a field of 100 in the sixth annual southern prep and high school tournament. His father predicted anything from 95 to 105 for the lad's first 18 holes in the 54 of medal play.

"King Bobby" said nothing as yet stamps his son as a promising golfer.

"He lacks experience," the father explained, "for he only recently took up the game. He gets the distance on the drives but that is flowers. Miniature, corsages, and about all."

Saying that he hoped his son would stay clear of a tournament golf career, Jones limited his explanation to the statement "there are other things more important today."
