Bowling Green To Be S. I. A. A. Host

Western State Teachers College will be host to the Southern Inter-Collegiate Athletic Association in its annual meeting to be held Monday and Tuesday, December 14 and 15, at the Helms hotel in Bowling Green, Ky.

The representatives of Murray State College who will attend this meeting are Dr. J. W. Carr, Coach Carlisle Cutchin and Professor Robert Montgomery.

Her Christmas Guest

THAT will do, thank you, Elise," and Elizabeth dismissed her maid with a smile. It was her custom each Christmas to entertain whatever guest the Charities sent to her without Elise's help.

Once it had been a down-and-out exclamation well along in years, once a lonely girl from the West, and several times thin little waifs from the tenements. On those later occasions Elizabeth had been glad of the fragrant tree which always stood in one corner of the apartment, alight with colored bulbs and hung with varied gifts.

There was no one in sight now—wait, wasn't that some one just turned the corner?

A moment later the bell rang and it, when she ran down the stairs and answered it, Elizabeth was decidedly taken back at the young man who stood before her. It is probable that he, too, had his moment of surprise as he gazed at the slender vision in a white dress.

"Miss Lowry, of the Charities sent me," he began.

"Oh, yes," nodded Elizabeth quickly. She mustn't let him think for an instant she had hesitated. She had absolute confidence in anyone Miss Lowry, head of the board, might send. "Hang your coat and hat on the customer at the head of the stairs. And, let me see, your name—"

Still the young man seemed a bit uncertain. Then, "Drake Gibson," he said, resolutely and abruptly.

Elizabeth breathed an unconscious sigh of relief, as she preceded him up the carpeted stairs. After the first embarrassing moments, she had always found that things went more easily.

Yet it was hard to believe, during the meal which followed, that her guest was the sort of down-and-out with which the Charities were wont to deal.

He talked interestingly and entertainingly and before she realized it, dinner was at an end and there remained as part of the festivities only the ceremony of choosing gifts from the tree.

She had rather decided to pass that part of the entertainment up when she remembered that she had hidden in a red cheesecloth stocking filled with candy a tiny purse with a five-dollar gold-piece in it. Nor was she to be blamed for supposing that a gift of money so tactfully presented would not be smiled at by anyone willing to accept a dinner from an utter stranger.

So, in her winning manner, Elizabeth suggested that they each choose a gift from the tree, and laughed when he carefully untied a little furry monkey.

Then she took down the stocking full of old-fashioned candy.

"At a proper tree there is always something to take home," she said. He smiled and accepted it. Then, to her horror, drawing out his knife and cutting the red string at the top.

"Have some!" he invited.

"No, thank you—no, thank you," she said in confusion, and watched him eat several pieces.

—Then he pulled out the tiny purse and, with a frown, opened it. Strangely enough, she saw no sudden blush or sign of self-consciousness. Rather he seemed relieved.

"This means that I must tell you," he said gravely. "And I'm very much ashamed of myself. You see, I've accepted your hospitality under false pretense. I'm—well, I'm only Miss Lowry's nephew home from globe trotting for my paper. She asked me to stop and tell you that the old lady she was going to send to your annual Christmas dinner had not shown up. You made the mistake of thinking I was the one and—oh, I've no proper apology but you know a fool repents. Guess turns down an experience of any kind." He paused and regarded her so wistfully that Elizabeth's anger melted. After all, it was Christmas time when one should be forgiving.

"I'll promise never, never to do it again!" he said with such an air of little-boyishness that Elizabeth laughed in spite of herself.

Neither one of them realized then that all their Christmas were to be spent together.

Kirksey Hi News

On Wednesday evening, November 24, the primary and intermediate grades gave a splendid program to a very interested audience. The entertainment showed that Kirksey high has some excellent actors who will take the places of those who leave every year. The program was sponsored by Misses McCallon and Cain, who are doing great work in their respective places. The Woman's Club will present a program in the high school auditorium on Saturday night, December 5, at 7 o'clock. Come out and get a full evening's entertainment.

The Kirksey Eagles flew over to Fredonia and met the Tolu quintet, after a hard fight the Tolu boys won by the score of 17-21. Both teams seemed unable to make the basket. On Saturday night Kirksey met the Fredonia boys at Fredonia and won by the score of 20-32. They played a much better game than on the preceding night. The visitors were never threatened at any point of the game. The Kirksey boys were splendidly entertained during their stay at Tolu and Fredonia.

The debating team is planning to attend the Murray-Oxford debate at Murray, December 6.

The Honor Roll for the third sixth week follows:

Seventh Grade: Grace Tibbels, Reva Pearl Farless, Ruth Hanley.
Ninth Grade: Macon McCuiston.
Tenth Grade: Geneva Brewer, Kelly Rogers, Kenneth Palmer.
Eleventh Grade: Louise Tucker, Hilda McCuiston, Theron Riley.
Twelfth Grade: Lurvin Cain, Harvey Story.

Blakely News

Thanksgiving holidays were spent by most people, stripping tobacco, on account of the rains we had recently.

Mr. Millard Graham is ill at his writing. We all hope he will soon recover.

Volney Edwards spent the holidays with her sister, Mrs. B. J. Stagner of Murray.

Mrs. Hillard Blakely and wife, Mr. Bill Baker and wife, came in last week for the winter.

Alice Gruggett visited in Murray during the holidays.

Pauline Stroud has been visiting Christine Blakely and Nadine Graham the past several days.

We were proud of the cool weather. Quite a few people have killed hogs, and we certainly enjoy the fresh meat.

Mrs. Charlie Gruggett was the week end guest of her brother, Leslie Roach of near Brewers.

Several are absent from school on account of tobacco stripping. Everyone had a good time during the holidays but were glad to come back to school on Monday.

We have begun planning our Christmas program which will be given on Christmas Eve. Those on the Honor Roll for the fifth month are as follows:

Eighth Grade: Alice Gruggett, Helen Jackson, Agnes Nannery, and Lola Nannery.
Sixth Grade: Ruby Mae Young.
Fourth Grade: Dorothy Gruggett, James Gruggett and Miss Nannery.
Third Grade: Dorothy Sue Smith.
Second Grade: Beulah Nannery.
First Grade: W. O. Connor, Carnell Gruggett, Miller Hopkins, and Will Rob Walston.

—The Wren

It WAS three weeks before Christmas. But already the atmosphere of the holiday season seemed to cover the city. Paul Rainer felt it as he boarded the street car that took him home each evening; already men and women were loaded down with packages that had all the earmarks of Yuletide gifts.

There was something about Christmas that always thrilled Paul; he even liked to repeat the name over and over to himself. He often wished that he might be selling toys and things at Christmas instead of being office boy at the big lumber concern where he worked.

"Gee, mother!" he yelled as he went in the door; "the Daily Mirror is giving prizes for the best decorated homes at Christmas. Wouldn't it be great if we could win one of them?"

"But, Paul," Mrs. Rainer spoke as if she hated to throw cold water on his enthusiasm, "you know we can't afford to do anything of that kind. I only wish we could for your sake," she added. "Maybe next year."

Paul looked around the sparsely furnished room before replying: "Never mind, mother," he said, "for the time, I forgot about things. Darn money, anyway; why does it always have to block the way when we want to do something we like?"

"It doesn't always block the way, Paul; in fact, most of the time the absence of it is an incentive to do big things. If everybody had money many of the great deeds that have thrilled the world never would have been accomplished. And—and, Paul, don't you think we have been fairly happy without a lot of it?" She looked anxiously into his face as she put the question.

Paul was his old happy self when he replied: "Bet your life we have. Why, all the fellows say they'd rather come to our house than any where else. And—and, mother, if I had had lived we would have been as well off as the rest of them!"

In the hours that followed Paul seemingly forgot about the newspaper prize, but his mother did not. That night, after he had retired, she sat down in the little living room and pondered the matter over. Was there any way that she could help him to carry out his desire? What a happiness it would be to give him the joy of competing in the contest!

Suddenly she started from her chair and a smile came over her face.

Had the Earmarks of Yuletide Gifts.

Her thoughts had drifted back through the years; back to childhood days. She remembered out on the farm how her mother had taught her to fashion many beautiful Christmas decorations out of scraps of tinfoil and colored paper. Always there had been a box in the attic where everything of this sort had been stored away.

And, as is often the case, the things we do in childhood stay with us; so she herself had continued to save bits of paper and other things as her mother had, and now there was a huge box of it stacked away in the closet. Perhaps out of it she could fashion something that would enable Paul to enter the contest?

For a whole week two busy persons worked across the table from each other every evening. Carefully small rolls of tinfoil and rolls of green-and-red paper were smoothed out and fashioned into Christmas decorations. Out of the discarded pieces of silver paper and tinfoil a great gleaming star began to take shape, a star that seemed to fill the whole room with its radiance. For, from the moment that mother and son began working upon it, it seemed to them as if the Star that led the Wise Men was shining again. From the love and care they had put into its making it seemed so be taking on real life, and all unconsciously their voices grew low and hushed as they worked upon it. And slowly from the red-and-green paper letters were formed, huge letters along simple lines that told the message that the angels sang in the long ago.

"Mother, it's going to be great!" Paul would say every now and then in his enthusiasm. "There couldn't be anything better than this; why—why this star seems as if it were really alive!"

But Mrs. Rainer knew of the many lavish and expensive decorations that were going up all over town. The simple things that they were fashioning would probably show up very small beside such display. But she tried to keep faith with the faith of her son. And even though they should not get a prize, this work that they were doing was bringing them a great amount of happiness; a deeper and finer spirituality than they ever had known before. They seemed to have caught the very spirit of Christmas; each day seemed to be bringing them nearer to Bethlehem.

In a week the decorations were finished, and Paul took a ladder and set to work. Across the high side wall of the house that faced the street he placed the letters that had been woven from scraps of paper. When completed, they read: "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men." Above this he placed the silver star which had grown to be so real. With long extension cords and three reflecting lights that they had been able to hire from a nearby electrician for a small sum, the lighting system was complete.

Paul could scarcely wait until darkness fell to turn on the current. His hands trembled with excitement when finally the moment

"Mother, it's Going to Be Great!" came, and his heart almost stood still as he looked up and saw the message that was thrilled the world for nearly 2,000 years stand out in bold relief. Above it the silver star gleamed brightly; to Paul it seemed more alive than ever.

Through the days that followed mother and son thrilled as they noticed the many people who stopped outside. Cars from all over the city drove by each night, and the comments and praise that they heard was as music to their ears.

"Paul, do you think we could have got as much happiness out of this if we had lots of money and could have bought anything we wished?" Mrs. Rainer inquired of her son one evening.

"No, mother, I don't," Paul answered very quietly. "There wouldn't have been half the fun in it that there has been. I just don't care now whether we win a prize or not. To see how much beauty we have been able to make out of so little has been reward enough. And it has taught me a lesson I will never forget. Oh, mother!" his voice grew excited, "you are just wonderful—you are! Who but you would have thought of such a thing?"

But Paul did win a prize—to the surprise of his mother and himself he won the greatest prize the paper had offered—$200. The simplicity of the design, the artistic skill that love and care had woven into it, the contrast between it and other elaborate decorations entered, and the evident spirituality of the message were all lent their influence toward the final decision. Three times the judges drove by to see it, and each time they grew more impressed. There seemed to be a strange radiance about this particular exhibit that they could not account for. They could not know that it came from all that had been put there by loving hands. But all were unanimous in deciding that it merited the first and best prize.

It is doubtful if any two ever spent a more wonderful and joyous Christmas than Paul and his mother. They could scarcely credit the fact that their work had been counted the best in the whole city. And the prize meant much to two who had to scrimp and save for so many years. To them $200 was a very large amount—it would buy many needed things.

But over and above this was the thought that the thing they had fashioned from almost nothing but faith and love had been considered worthy of a prize. And as they stood in front of the modest little home after the judges had left and looked up toward the great, gleaming star that seemed to smile down at them, they were both filled with the deepest and most wonderful happiness that even Christmas can bring. Love and faith had once again found a way! Its message was shining brightly for the grateful pair!

At Your Christmas Service

at a Good Time Party we Must have Games

Everywhere now there are signs and favours that there is a good time trail winding back to the home, not only at the Christmas Time but all the time.

Passing are the days when we feel it necessary to seek out the club or the public place to dance or otherwise make merry, and not only has the new mode in pleasure turned this trail back to the family center again, but it has provided an encouraging aid in the "whoopie" room which sounds so much more wild than it really is intended to be.

The sort of whoopie that is raised in such a surrounding has the most attractive of wholesome atmosphere in which to flourish, and where there is the house that can find, in basement or in attic or elsewhere on the premises, some room—it doesn't have to be a large one—to outfit for fun, there Good Times will take up a dwelling permanently.

Outfitting the Basement

In the basement of one little house there has been outfitted a corner room, and furnished with tables and benches knocked together from smooth plans, augmented by card tables, with wall seats and occasional chairs, all of them comfortable if not brand new, and where the victrola has found a much more useful place than it had when upstairs in competition with the radio, but where there is also a radio if the preference commands it.

There is a fireplace built of stones found in the neighboring country, and there are shelves in variety knocked together to hold books and magazines and games, and rough cupboards for dishes and things of that sort. The youth problem has settled itself definitely in this home, and the "whoopie" room rings with the wholesome fun of children of the family and their friends, night after night.

Place for Holiday Party

A raid on such a room as this might well provide the Christmas party hostess with her entertainment material. Let her carry upstairs the checkers, the chess men, the dominoes, the crokinole board, the bean bags and board that belongs to the smallest of the children, the parchesi set, the jack straws, the authors and fiddle-de-winks, assemble a group of card tables and her party is an assured success. All these good oldtime games are quite the rage in the cities and in the towns, and even if one never waits for fashion to suggest the moves in the right direction, one may definitely make them this Christmas Time by the use of games.

Games will provide the fun at the club party or the home party, just you wait and see. Those who may look with contempt upon amusement of this sort with first arrival, will be drawn into the fun before many minutes pass, and will be ending the evening the whoopiest of the whoopees—just you see! For the family Christmas party it might perhaps be best to divide the games among small groups, for families are pretty likely to have peculiar prejudices and to express them freely. Little Mary doesn't like to play jackstraws with little Willie because "Willie always beats", but she dotes on playing dominoes with Grandfather.

Do you remember Lotto, that game in which we cover the numbers on green and white squares printed on cardboards, with little glass squares as the leader calls them, and try to be the first to set a row covered? Well, Lotto is a grand game to introduce to the Christmas party. Order the Christmas dinner table cleared, gather round the group, young and old, and let the fun begin. That will be the end of planning, we guarantee, until the afternoon is well into evening. And do you remember Peter Codrile?

Time-Honored Games

Out of a little paper we read his adventures and from little slips of cards we supply the missing word. The game is popular again, and it creates great merriment in a group. And then there was the old time-honored game of Consequences that we played and our mothers played before us, where we all took pieces of paper and began by writing at the top "How name" and folding our paper down over the writing and passing it to next person. In turn we write, "His name," and fold and pass the paper along again. And so we follow with "Where they went", "What they did", "Whom they saw", "Doing— and so on, until a ridiculous narrative is compiled on every paper and in turn we read them aloud to convulsive companies. Why not play "Consequences" at your Christmas party?

There is a game going the rounds now wherein players sit about the room and one leaves the room. The rest determine upon the name of some individual of current or historical, or perhaps local fame, but familiar to most people. When the one leaving the room returns, he has the privilege of starting in the circle and going the rounds of the players, asking each a leading question to draw out suggestions as to the name he is then bearing, and all questions must be answered by "yes" or "no". Much merriment prevails for instance, when the name of the person himself or herself is chosen, or when such a person as the Linbergh baby, the unknown soldier, one of the old prophets or some such person is taken to be guessed. When the clue is given that reveals to the one guessing the correct name, the one from whom he had the last answer leaves the room and it is his or her turn to guess.
