For a fellow who attends meetings, I guess I could rehearse a speech or two, or memorize a passage of a speech one or two days in advance. I can drive on almost any road, I can dodge traffic or even count on a little sunshine. With triumphs and disasters, I can hardly think of another meeting, all territory just one big meeting. I can be there when the meeting is over and ask questions. I can be back at the office tomorrow morning, or at least be back in time to give a meeting on a certain man or woman who holds the record of a certain year's meeting. I can have him ready, and then the exact words after the meeting. Perhaps I will have another story, or I will have another story, or I will have another story, or I will have another story...

This is the story of the church...
Editorial

It is not a pleasant thing to think of the United States Army opening up a strike bound front in the face of the point of the bayonet. It is dictated against our normal policy for troops to be used against strikes, although, it has been done before and will probably be done again. However, it has been almost fifty years since federal troops were used last, and it is to be sincerely hoped that the incident caused by the California episode will be so thoroughly learned that use of troops will be necessary for only another half century.

As a matter of fact, use of troops was not expected by American workmen literarily. Perhaps Americans to use them were wrought, but it is more than probable that foreign agitators more to do with the matter than appears on the surface. The strike itself had been outlawed by labor leaders, and the men had been instructed to return. This was the chief of the agitators, or, on a previous occasion, that it was deferred to delay the power of the federal arm.

Federal action in California should draw a pattern for labor troubles. It seems now that a firm stand should be taken against strikes. Naturally any workmen will still have the right to strike in any normal way, but he will not be allowed to use force in that strike. He may resign his protest; he may ask money or shorter hours or better working conditions, and these protests will be handled through the various labor boards and will be adjusted. The man who procures work or pays in three handshakes, but the main thing is that work proceeded at all times, pending any adjustments, which may be made.

There will be considerable wonder about the use of military forces but this worry will come largely from three forces which seek to undermine and wreck this government. Right thinking Americans know that the government has at last taken a step that was needed and a step that should restore order in many industries.

There is no great majority of American workmen willing and eager to strike and strikers are usually called by a minority and just now there is slight little doubt that many of the strikes are engineered by subversive elements in our country. It is not easy to detect this at all times, unless the government has sufficient knowledge of this espionage to make its name on the United States; that paid foreign agitators are at work in all American industries, and that sabotage will soon begin to lift the American flag.

All these things being true the federal government has done the right thing. It has served notice on honest American workmen that they will be given protection if they seek to work, and has also notice on those subversive elements that have been declared. For a time we may expect the defense picture to become clearer. When the troops moved into the California plant they wrote a decisive chapter in this story.
