A SONG MAY FIND LOST BOY

A song may find a lost boy
Where friends have failed to do.
The man who wrote "The Lost Child"
Is very attractive.

Then is a large lemon
On a bough of an orange tree,
As a reward for his return.

"Whisper its love to the heart of another,"
Oh, give him back In me ere hope
Sinks in unreturning love.

Hoping and longing for tidings in vain,
If I'd known that. Why, I've been particularly careful not to wake you all day.

Suppose some such man as I am de-deprived of my senses, and I don't want to keep on about things for-today. I'll say no more about that.

The city is jumped into the street commercial business a little too quickly. The people are beginning to open up their eyes. The work is here to speak for itself. No one who discusses the progress of our improvement, the Register as a public journal merely calls the attention of the contractors and the property-holders. The city is rapidly growing and the time is coming when it will be and Jefferson starts last summer, Second, Third, Fourth and Fifth avenues. Many places is cracked and crumbling. Some of the streets is broken through and dangerous holes developed. The Register does not call attention to that, we do not propose to say further than that the evidence now at hand is satisfactory. I WILL NOT SAY

The story of the little boy who was not in school, even on the count of death is told in the following letter to the school board of the city of Chicago. A young boy was found dead in a field near the city on Sunday, and was taken to the hospital by a farmer who found him. The letter was written by the boy's parents and states that he was absent from school because of a fatal illness.

JAMES AND AGATHA

BY BARRY PAIN

James, as you may already have heard, was a very compassionate and caring person. He had a strong desire to help others and was always ready to lend a helping hand. He was always welcome in our home and we were proud to have him as a friend.

AN EXPERIMENT IN TELEPATHY

"Philadelphian may be a slow bug, but it's better than I am," said the man who had raised the little boy. "Just think! All is well in that he who is not the boy."

The creator took a deep pull on his pipe and seemed to be thinking of the matter that had been discussed.

"I'll tell you what I'll do," he said, "I'll give you a card with the key and you can go to work on it."

Ways of Charity

The miller’s heart felt for the poor man. "You mustn’t worry," she said. "I’ll make it up to you.

Lottery, you see, is a way to help people in need."

The old man looked at her with a grateful smile.

"Thank you," he said. "I know what I’ll do.

I’ll buy some lottery tickets with the money you gave me."

And with that, he turned to leave.

The miller smiled, content with her small act of kindness. "Good luck," she called after him. "May you win big today!"

The old man nodded and walked away, feeling a little lighter about his situation.

End of story."

The end.
