The Ohio Valley Railway.

The completion of the Ohio Valley Railway to Princeton adds another outlet to Evansville's Southern business, and opens up a comparatively new field for the merchants. The C. O. & S. W. R. R. have just changed the time of their trains—making close and certain connections at Princeton with the Ohio Valley for Paducah, Memphis and all points South and Southwest, with only one change of cars, thus making the shortest and quickest line to the South. Parties leaving here on the steamer Frank Stele at 10:15 a. m. can reach Paducah at 5:15 p. m. and Memphis at 11:30 p. m. the same night. "The Ohio Valley is in the hands of live, energetic men, who are rapidly making a valuable property of it, and who never fail to assist their patrons in every way possible, being liberal, generous and courteous. The Ohio Valley Railway intends opening a freight and passenger office in the near future, when they will show every attention to the needs and comforts of their friends and patrons.—Evansville Journal.

A NOTED CRIMINAL.

Henry Johnson's Murderer is Released From Jail on Bond.

Miles G. Radford, better known as "Old Rock," one of Kentucky's most famous murderers, has returned to this city. He was liberated recently from the Trigg county jail, where he has been incarcerated many long months. Five years ago he was a hale and hearty man, now he presents a sad spectacle. He is broken down in body and mind, his giant frame wasted by disease and his haughty spirit utterly cowed by his misfortune and suffering. Everybody knows the history of the Radford-Johnson murder, which was enacted a few miles from this city. The tragedy occurred five years ago, but it is yet fresh in the public mind. On the morning of November 3, 1882, about 7 o'clock, Henry D. Johnson was intercepted upon the public highway, and in the presence of his wife and child shot to death by "Rock" Radford.

The Radford family, one of the wealthiest in the State, reside in this county. "Old Rock" belonged to the aristocracy of Kentucky, and at one time inherited a fortune as proud as his name. He was a typical Kentuckian, with a powerful physique, handsome face and a keen intellect. Reverses came after a while, and then one disappointment following another changed him from a jolly, vivacious to a moody, reckless man. After he killed Johnson, his arrest and the trial which followed, made an epoch in the criminal history of Kentucky. In many respects this was the most remarkable and celebrated trial that ever occurred in Christian or Trigg county. The circumstances attending the tragedy, the high character and position of the defendant, and the celebrity of the leading counsel engaged, invested this remarkable case with great interest. His first trial, which grouped together the talent of the Southern bar, was held in this city, resulting in a hung jury. It was then continued from court to court until finally, two years ago, his lawyers got a change of venue to Trigg county. The trial there also resulted in a disagreement. In the third trial he was given seventeen years in the penitentiary. Powerful influence was brought to bear upon Governor Knott to pardon him, which he refused to do. The Court of Appeals last Spring reversed the decision of the lower court, and a few weeks ago the murderer was liberated under a heavy bond.

Hon. Jas. B. Garner, Kentucky's greatest criminal lawyer, in arguing this celebrated case, concluded his remarks as follows: "We are relaxing the laws, which leads to anarchy, and from personal violence to popular usurpation. I tell you again and again, when you lay your hands upon great delinquents, make them an example; then you will more easily check pernicious discords and restore to its proper tension and tone the harmonizing power of your laws and your government. Gentlemen, the whole State of Kentucky looks to you this day for justice, for this is an awful crime, without an equal in all this broad commonwealth."

The murderer is again in the world, with its swift moving wheels. From being a giant of 200 pounds, he has dwindled down to 130, and it seems as if he is almost ready to sink into his grave. His career has been a most remarkable one, but the sad of life has about run out, as he does not appear to be able to live much longer.

Last Summer, it is said, he appeared before an undertaker and purchased a fine and costly metallic coffin, placed it in a wagon and conveyed it to his country residence. It is a general rumor, and not altogether improbable, that he also bought his tombstone with the inscription, "Miles G. Radford, died June 27, 1886." Thus the above would conclusively indicate that the murderer, in case he received the death or imprisonment sentence, would commit suicide June 21. He always appeared to regard the deed he had committed as one of necessity, as an act of merciful kindness to the human race. All in all it is a sad and romantic story, and an interesting chapter in Christian's catalogue of crime.

The cleansing, antiseptic and healing qualities of Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy are unequalled.

Here's News.

Tuesday night a tall, gray-haired, distinguished looking gentleman walked up to the office counter of the Phoenix Hotel and in a clear hand wrote "Thos. F. Loomis, Chicago." He was assigned to room No. 12. The following day another individual entered in and gazed about the office, as if expecting some one. This gentleman was D. A. Courter, also of Chicago. He, too, was assigned to room No. 12. These facts were furnished the reporter who at once believed the strangers to be railroad men. Judge Landes was seen at his office and that gentleman confirmed the reporter's suspicion. A few hours later Judge Landes, Thos. F. Loomis and D. A. Courter were clustered in the former's office. Wednesday our reporter sent up his card to room No. 12, and a few minutes later stood in the presence of Messrs. Courter and Townes. On the bed was spread a railroad map. Mr. Courter, in conversation with the New Era man, stated that it was not advisable at present to speak definitely as to his purpose in coming here, that he deemed it imprudent to furnish the press with any information whatever, but for us to lay low and that in a few weeks we would hear something "drip." Enough was gleaned, however, to correctly state that the object these gentlemen had in coming here was for the purpose of investigating the feasibility of constructing another and independent railroad through our territory. These gentlemen are in no wise connected with the O. V., and it is clear that we are to hear something very interesting in the near future.
