WASHINGTON, D.C. — President Roosevelt today announced the establishment of a new military force to be known as the European Theater of Operations. The force will consist of approximately 100,000 men and women, and is designed to support the military efforts of the United States in its fight against Germany and Japan.

The new theater will be commanded by General Dwight D. Eisenhower, who will also serve as Supreme Allied Commander in Europe. The force will be composed of elements from all branches of the armed forces, including the army, navy, air force, and marines.

The announcement was made during a press conference at the White House, where the President pledged to use every resource at his disposal to defeat the Axis powers.

"We are taking this step," said the President, "because we believe that the combined forces of the United States and Great Britain are the only means by which we can hope to achieve victory in this war."

The new theater will be responsible for coordinating and executing all military operations in Europe, including the invasion of France and the Battle of the Bulge.

The announcement was met with enthusiastic support from both the military and the public.

"This is a brave new world," said General Eisenhower. "We have a big job ahead of us, but we are ready to do it."

The new theater will be headquartered in London, with a smaller command center in Washington, D.C.

The announcement was accompanied by a call for volunteers to join the European Theater of Operations. The President urged all Americans to consider joining the fight against the Axis powers.

"This is no time for neutrality," said the President. "We must be all in on this one."

The new theater will be supported by a large-scale propaganda effort, including the distribution of leaflets and the broadcast of radio messages.

The announcement was met with enthusiasm by the public, who were encouraged to support the war effort in any way they could.

"We are in this together," said the President. "And we will win this war."
