Says Countries Need Education As Pre-Inducers

Small Nations' Training IS

URGED BY ROOSEVELT AS STEP

In Forming Post-War World

Washington, D.C. — President Roosevelt, discussing the claim of small nations to be a pre-inducers in the handling of the great world problem that will arise after the war, said today that there is a need for training small nations for the post-war world. Roosevelt pointed out that small nations cannot be expected to play a major role in the post-war world if they are not prepared for it. He said that small nations need education and training to be able to contribute to the post-war world.

The new North African campaign has begun. Air power has been a great factor in this campaign. It has been used to tear holes in Rommel’s supply lines, while they built up their own lines, and in the ensuing counterattack, it played a decisive role.

When attention is called to any new weapon in the war, the public naturally thinks of ships and planes. This is because the news column correction will be the first to announce any new item. However, the most important addition to the war armament is the American soldier. This is the first time in history that a new weapon is introduced which requires no training. The American soldier is a weapon in itself.

FULTON DAILY LEADER
London. — The story of a noted aviator and his plane of lasting worth aircraft from a British carrier was an event that marked another chapter in the history of airmen. The aircraft, a Vickers Vimy, was the first to make the crossing of the Atlantic in 1919.

The flight was a triumph of navigation and engineering. The aircraft had a crew of three: the pilot, the navigator, and the observer. The navigator, Lt. Commander E. V. E. H. Rainbow, was responsible for keeping track of the aircraft's position and making the necessary calculations to ensure a safe and successful crossing.

The aircraft was equipped with the latest navigation aids, including a wireless set, which allowed the crew to communicate with other aircraft and receive updates on their position. The crew also used a wireless beam to guide them in the dark.

The flight was a significant milestone in the development of long-distance navigation and served as a proof of concept for future long-range flights. The Vickers Vimy's success led to the development of more advanced aircraft and navigation systems, which would eventually allow for faster and more reliable flights across the Atlantic.

The story of the Vickers Vimy's flight is a testament to the ingenuity and skill of the aviators who risked their lives to achieve such a feat. It is a reminder of the progress that has been made in the field of aviation and the importance of continued innovation and improvement in this field.
