CHESTER MURBELL, ALTHOUGH DEPRESSED \( \cdots \) REMEMBERS DUTY

Yesterday afternoon Chester Murbell, engaged in the mail and express department, paid us a visit at the plant. The depression was evident in his countenance as he entered the office and took his place at the desk. He spoke in a subdued tone, his voice low and his eyes cast down.

"I am thinking of giving up the job," he said. "I feel that I am not up to the work."

The foreman, who is a friend of Chester, appeared surprised at his statement.

"What are you thinking of doing, Chester?" he asked.

"I am not sure," Chester replied. "I might try something else, or I might just stay home for a while."

The foreman shook his head.

"Chester, you are a fine worker. You have always done your best. Don't give up so easily.

Chester sighed. "I know, but I feel that I am not cut out for this kind of work."

The foreman patted him on the shoulder.

"Chester, you are a valuable asset to the company. You have done well in the past, and you will do well in the future. Don't give up so easily.

Chester smiled. "Thank you, Mr. Foreman. I will think about it."
