U. S. Marines Set Sail 167 Years Ago
On First Overseas "Commando" Raid

The United States Navy and Marine Corps began its first overseas incursion in 167 years on January 17, 1776, when 322 marines were sent ashore by a small craft in the Bahamas Islands of the British West Indies to raid a British colony and establish the first overseas "commando" raid. The mission was not a success, but it laid the groundwork for future military operations.

The British governor of the Bahamas Islands was taken by surprise and the raid was quickly thwarted. However, the marines managed to take a few prisoners and seize a few supplies, including 71 cannons, 15 mortars, and a quantity of gunpowder. The British authorities were so alarmed by the raid that they ordered all ships in the Bahamas Islands to be put on alert, and the marines were forced to return to their ships and sail back to the American colonies.

Despite the initial failure, the mission was considered a success, because it demonstrated the Marines' ability to conduct raids abroad and establish commando bases.
This paved the way for future military operations and helped establish the Marines as a force to be reckoned with in the world of warfare.

The U. S. Marines have been involved in countless overseas operations since 1776, including World War I, World War II, the Korean War, the Vietnam War, and the wars in Iraq and Afghanistan.
Their ability to conduct raids and establish commando bases has remained a key part of their mission, and they continue to be a vital part of the United States military today.
