THE ARMY RECOGNIZES THE RAILROADS
AS THE BACKBONE OF THE NATIONAL TRANSPORTATION SYSTEM

When the newspapers feature the sensational exploits of our fighting forces, few realize the tremendous work the railroads play in putting our troops on the distant battle fronts and in maintaining them there.

Before an armistice can be signed on a foreign shore, a colossal transportation job must be done at home. Fighting men must be transported by train from various points before reaching a port of embarkation. To transport them calls for intensive operations. The enginemen at the throttle, the signalmen in the tower, the dispatchers on the road—each person who makes the trip possible.

To move a triangular division of 32,000 men the operation of 64 trains; an armored division with some 3,500 mobile units requires 75 trains. To transport millions of fighting men becomes a gigantic undertaking.

As General Good has said, the railroads are the backbone of the national transportation system—in peace and war. Providing moving our armies, they must also transport the thousands of our guns and rations, food, clothing and supplies—the job of transportation is never-ending.

It is the railroads’ job to make our country’s fighting job a success.
