When the Long Distance Telephone Operator asked, "Is there a call for me?" there will be a call for you, if you will wait five minutes.

IT MEANS: All long distance telephone lines are overcrowded with urgent war business.

Under such conditions, if your call isn't extremely urgent, it will help to a lot if you will tell the operator to stop your call, so you avoid further crowding of the lines.

If your call is important, but you can wait until some other time to talk, then tell the operator to extend the call and by again when you find the lines are less crowded.

The deeper we get into this war, the greater the demand for more and more long distance telephone, due to the needs of our agencies. Their calls must go over the same lines that civilians use.

"I couldn't help noticing you, Mary," said George earlier that day, "You seem to be interested in something, but you're not telling me what it is."

"Oh, no," said Mary, "I just enjoy reading about the latest inventions in radio."

"Radio? You mean talking machines?"

"Sure, but they're a lot more advanced now. They have wireless transmission and all sorts of new developments."
