A Deplorable Situation

by Eddie Henry

Here’s an item I printed out, and apparently it’s not unique, which makes me wonder why I haven’t heard of it before.

The Associated Press is apparently planning to use the following as a model for its future reporting:

"The Associated Press is reporting on the growing problem of the shortage of newspapers. This problem is particularly acute in rural areas, where the cost of publishing and distribution of the newspapers has recently increased."

I’m curious about this because I’ve never heard of the Associated Press wanting to increase their costs, and I’m also curious about how they plan to publish newspapers in rural areas where the cost of publishing and distribution is already high.

Position Is Recovered

by Sam Davenport

I found this item in the city directory, and it seems to be a relatively new position. It’s a bit unclear what the responsibilities of the position are, but it appears to be related to the city government.

The position is listed as "City Councilman," and it’s located in Fulton, Kentucky. I’m not sure what the name of the person holding the position is, but it’s not a common name.
