Government Subsistence Homestead Projects Are Being Sold To Former Tenants, Other Homeless

By Newton D. Baker

Washington—The government's homestead projects, which have turned over most of their properties to former tenants, have been sold to others.

The government has sold 20,000 acres of land to former tenants, and 10,000 acres to others.

The projects were under the jurisdiction of the Department of Agriculture, and were started during the depression years of the 1930s.

These loans are being repaid, or are being attacked when the projects are turned over to the government.

First Preference: All former tenants are given first preference for the properties.

Second Preference: Properties are then offered to others who meet the requirements of the government.

Disposal of Projects

The projects have been disposed of as follows:

1. All streets, roads, and water supplies shall be turned over to the government.

2. All records, record books, and other records shall be turned over to the government.

3. All projects shall be turned over to the government.

4. Records shall be kept in the government's possession.

5. All ordinances or parts of ordinances shall be turned over to the government.
